Work of Two Brilliant Men Revolutionized Dairying

Prying Professor Found Simple Way to Measure Fat Content of Cream; Cream Separator Work of Swedish Inventor.

Dr. De Laval.

Two adventurous and brilliant men working in different parts of the world practically revolutionized the greatest rural industry in the United States. A prying professor named Babcock, working in the laboratory of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture, found a simple, accurate way to determine the butterfat content of milk or cream. A brilliant inventive genius named De Laval, laboring in his workshop in Sweden, found a way by which whole milk could be accurately, continuously and quickly separated into cream and skimmilk. De Laval also inaugurated the research which resulted in the widely-used efficient mechanical milker of today.

Professor Babcock's discovery stabilized the dairy industry. Doctor De Laval's separator saved farm women millions of dollars' worth of cream while his milking machine saved farm men millions of hours of drudgery.

"When it is realized," says Dr. C. W. Larson, former director of the National Dairy Council, "that the change from the gravity method of obtaining cream for buttermaking and other purposes to the continuous separator resulted in the saving of labor, a better quality of cream and butter, a skim milk superior for feeding purposes and available for the manufacture of by-products, and a great saving of the butterfat that was lost in the skim milk, the value of this ingenious invention can scarcely be overestimated.

Old Methods Wasteful.

"If all the cream that was used in this country last year for making butter alone had been separated by the deep-setting system, which was the best method known at the time the centrifugal separator was invented, more than $35,000,000 worth of butterfat would have been left in the skim milk. This does not take into consideration the enormous quantity of cream that was used as cream and for making ice cream. By the old method much more labor would have been required in the homes and in the factories, and the present high quality of products could not have been made."

The cream separator eliminates the great waste which accompanies hand skimming methods. According to experiments conducted at the Indiana State Experiment Station in separating a certain quantity of milk, 26.2 pounds of butterfat were lost by shallow pan gravity setting, and 40.07 pounds were lost by water dilution, while only 1.2 pounds were lost when a centrifugal separator was used This gives one an idea of the enormous losses which occur from hand skimming and which a good separator eliminates. In addition, it saves all the time, trouble, bother of setting handling and washing pans, and provides the skim milk in a sweet condition, ideal for feeding young stock. This is extremely important, as much of the profit from dairying comes from proper utilization of skim milk

Find Worn Separators Faulty.

There are many separators in use today, however, that are wasting valuable butterfat in the skim milk without the owner knowing of his losses. Badly worn separators, or ones that were of faulty construction to begin with, should be replaced. A farm wife can tell whether her coffee grinder is grinding fine, medium or coarse by merely looking at the texture of the coffee after it has passed through the grinder. But no one can tell how much cream a separator is wasting by looking at the skim milk, nor by filling a glass with skim milk and allowing it to "set" on the window sill for a day or more to see how much cream rises to the top. When one "sets" skim milk that has gone through the separator it cannot be expected that the small, hard-to-get fat globules will work their way through the milk serum and rise to the top unless there is an unusually heavy loss. "Setting" skim milk is merely an impractical way of trying to test an inefficient separator by the more inefficient gravity setting "test."

Pointers on Feeding

The most successful farmers are those who feed their stock well, and care for them well.

Cows producing from three to five hundred pounds of butterfat in a year must be heavily fed.

Growing heifers must also be heavily fed if they are to grow into large heavy producing cows.

Profitable production requires good feed, fed right.

Discontinue Dairy

L. Shaver and R. Perry owners and operators of the Golden Sherry Dairy farm here, discontinued their business here recently. Mr. Shaver expects to leave at once for the University Farm, St. Paul, where he will receive special training at the 6-weeks' Creamery Operators' Short Course.

Oscar Reierson who was the herdsman on the new dairyfarm has not announced his plans for the future.

Ice and Wood Bids Announced

Ed Long of Thief River Falls was the low bidder on the job of furnishing ice to the creamery here. He took the job to pack the 120 tons of ice for 97 cent a ton. Mr. Long also packs ice at Middle River. He trucks the ice from the Red Lake River at Thief River Falls.

The 65 cords of wood that the creamery board advertised for on bids was divided up among local farmers who had low bids. The price paid for this wood was $3 and $3.25 a cord.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank all the friends and neighbors for kindness and sympathy shown during the illness and death of our beloved brother and uncle and for the flowers offered.

Funeral Here

Funeral services were conducted here on Saturday afternoon from the Nazareth Lutheran church for Alfred Thompson who died on Monday, Dec. 22d at the age of 59 years.

Mr. Thompson was born Dec. 28th, 1871 near Austin, Minn., where he grew to manhood. After reaching the age of 21 he went to North Dakota where he settled on a homestead near Bismark and startsd farming. After living there three years he was united in marriage with Helena Dahl from which union there are eight children whom all remain to mourn his loss.

The last few years Mr. Thompson has spent with his brothers and sisters in Canada, coming here about three months ago to stay at the home of his nephews Arnold and Rendahl Sannes.

Interment was made in the Holt cemetery. Rev. L. M. Redal officiated.

Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Ness spent Monday evening at the Rudolph Smith home.

Motor Caravan to Cross Asia

Modernly Equipped Scientists to Explore Least Known Places.

Washington.—Plans for one of the most comprehensive and most completely equipped expeditions of modern times were disclosed when Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic society, announced that the society will co-operate with Georges-Marie Haardt of Paris in sending out eight caterpillar cars, with scientists in a dozen fields, to span 5,000 miles of least-known Asia, from Beyrouth (Beirut), Syria, to Peiping (Peking), China, and then return across 8,000 miles more of a southern route.

M. Haardt came from Paris to Washington to complete arrangements with the society to send a representative with the expedition, whose other personnel will be entirely French, and which will have the approval of the French government and specific missions from France's ministry of foreign affairs.

Large Personnel of Scientists.

The patron of the expedition in France is Andre Citroen, lifelong friend of M. Haardt, and benefactor of many scientific projects, who also gave his support to M. Haardt's famous expedition which traversed Africa and first crossed the Sahara desert in motor cars.

The Trans-Asiatic expedition, with the National Geographic society co-operating, will take the field in March, with its eight caterpillar cars each carrying a trailer, conveying a personnel of 35 men, including specialists in geography, archeology, ornithology, botany, geology, anthropology and other branches of science.

It plans to start from France's westernmost Asiatic territory, in Syria, traverse Iraq, Persia, Russian Turkestan, Sinkiang, and China, turning south at Peiping for the long trail down to French Indo-China. Thence, from Saigon, it will return through Siam, Burma, India, Baluchistan, Persia and Arabia. In that journey it will traverse areas which have been little visited by Europeans since Marco Polo's time, skirt some of the world's highest mountains, lofty plateaus, cross the vast Gobi and Ala Shan deserts, and come upon tribes and racial remnants of ancient Asiatic peoples whose habits and habitats are virtually unknown.

Two cars will be devoted to the taking of one of the most comprehensive geographic vocal motion picture records ever made. The scenic wonders of innermost Asia, the customs and the costumes of its peoples will be photographed, both by the black-and-white and the color camera; and native dialects, songs, chants and rituals will be preserved in sound records.

Each trailer will carry tents, cots, camp chairs and a camp table for the personnel assigned to its car. One of the cars will be an auto-kitchen, equipped for quick service when the explorers halt for a meal.

The expedition will carry a radio sending station which at all times will keep it in touch with Paris; and this sending station will be utilized by the National Geographic society's representative in filing dispatches to the society's headquarters in Washington.

Fill Blanks on Weather Maps.

Among the technical studies to be made by members of the expedition will be those dealing with meteorology of areas which now are blank spaces on world weather maps. Magnetic observations will be made. An artist will supplement photographic studies with sketches of ethnographic value. Another will specialize in collecting objects of ethnological interest since the expedition will be traversing areas where some of the earliest phases of mankind's history transpired.

Georges-Marie Haardt, leader of the expedition, has been called the "motor car Livingtone of France," because of the amazing expedition he previously led through 15,000 miles of deserts and jungles in Africa. Upon that trip he used caterpillar tractors and automobiles, taking eight months to go from Algeria across the Sahara, around Lake Chad, and through the Belgian Congo to Mozambique. Some of his cars were then transported to Madagascar and he explored the interior of that island.

Sheep Is Acquitted of Murdering Youth

Verviers, Belgium.—Under an ancient penal law which has never been repealed, animals may be punished for offenses they commit. A sheep which recently pushed a four-year-old boy into the river was summoned before a court, charged with murder.

The attorney representing the sheep pleaded that as the animal was teased by the boy until it was driven to frenzy, and that as the child was responsible for the animal's temper, the act was not committed by the animal of its free choice.

The court agreed with the attorney defending the sheep, and the culprit was acquitted.

Teach Weed Control

McClave, Colo.—The McClave high school has a class in the study of weed control.

Seventeen different weeds were identified and sent to the botany department of the Colorado Agricultural college.

Winter Doesn't Stop Gold Seekers

Ice and snow do not deter these gold seekers as they erect a new camp in the Matachewan district near Bannockburn, Ont., where operations will be centered in following up the gold strike discovered by Bert Ashley and Bill Garvey.

BRUNETTES WIN! SNEEZE ONCE TO BLONDS' 4 TIMES

European Physicians Discover That They Are More Immune to Head Colds.

Paris.—Gentlemen may prefer blonds, but brunettes are more immune to colds in the head.

That is the decision of a group of European doctors who have been counting the sneezes of blonds and brunettes in all the climates of Europe. The brunettes won by about four to one.

The scientists have not been so rash as to say why, but in a paper which has been submitted to the Academy of Medicine, they summarize their studies and their decision. Blonds, they say, have less than half the resistance to head colds than have brunettes.

The same scientists decided again that the quantity of clothing worn has absolutely nothing to do with colds. Brunettes generally wear as little as blonds, and blonds or brunettes who cover themselves too heavily are more subject to cold than those who dress moderately.

The report of the doctors would show that head colds are far more prevalent in foggy countries than in the lands of sunshine. The fact that women in foggy countries are generally blonds, while farther south where the sun shines more the women are Latin in race and brunette in type, may have something to do with the result.

Bald men are even more immune to head colds than men with heavy masses of hair, blond or brunette. Those who are accustomed to going hatless are found to be practically immune. School boys have fewer head colds now than school boys had two decades ago, when they wore fur caps, mufflers, ear muffs and were swathed in wool from chin to toes. The doctors believe head colds can be made obsolete by moderate dress.

Woman Reaches Peak of Attractiveness at 50

Chicago.—Science having stayed the hand of time in its work of etching crow's feet and wrinkles on the feminine countenance, each year added to her age merely adds to the clever woman's experience in making herself lovely.

So at least cheerfully reasons Mme. Helena Rubinstein, beauty authority of London, Paris and New York, who admits she is old enough to have personal knowledge whereof she speaks.

"Any woman with brains enough to see the advantage of doing so can clip from 15 to 20 years from her age," Mme. Rubenstein informed an audience of beauty specialists here. "Scientific knowledge of diet, exercise and grooming make the woman of today appear from one to two decades younger than her mother was at the same age, and a contemporary of her own daughter."

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expresses fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Mrs. Krassin conducts Vilinsky in an inspection of the home and contrives that he shall not see Ilya. The commissar brutally insults Musia. Mrs. Krassin's thoughts are all of Ilya. Musia feels herself defenseless.

What was to become of her? For the first time in her life she faced peril. or the first time in her life she pondered deeply her place in the world, and her family and its place. In a way, she knew about her father and her mother. She knew that on her mother's side they were a great family—the Vaturlins; and that her mother had married the man who was known in all the conversations of her great relatives merely as "this Mr. Krassin," who was only a member of the small nobility.

It was difficult to think of the solid plain lady who was her mother, as a little girl; but yet she had the aid of a pastel which hung on the walls of this very room: a picture of Mrs. Krassin as a child in a low-necked, sleeveless dress, with light brown hair hanging down her back, and a narrow blue ribbon across her forehead, and with a small dog in her hands and a slightly frightened look in her eyes—Mrs. Krassin at thirteen. Now, with the frightened look occasionally returning, she had always been an inevitable sort of person, who married "this Mr. Krassin" because other suitors did not sue, and she wished to be emancipated. She had controlled her marriage, her worldly affairs, all her life, with a virile grasp, enormously proud of her wealth, her power, her rank, her family. A hard woman, but with one absorbing passion, her love for Ilya her son—a passion which Ilya seldom suspected; for her every soft impulse was in the list of Mrs. Krassin's secrets. The only strong person in the family—and she had not resented it when Vilinsky had done that. What, then was to become of her, Musia, in this earthquake of society?

As the night wore on, these reflections and the passage of time left her calmer. He was not coming tonight. Her mother, searching for her, finally came and found her daughter alseep by her father's door. She gently stroked Musia's hair, remembering her as a pretty toddling babe, when she prattled her first words—and what those words were. And then she remembered how as she grew taller, they had grown apart as the barriers of character and custom separated the older woman from the budding one.

A sudden access of affection rolled over Mrs. Krassin's soul as she looked down at the pretty head and face, so innocent in sleep, at the graceful form and the slim hands as if in anxiety in her lap—and she thought of Vilinsky. She stooped and gently kissed Musia's forehead. The girl started up screaming.

"Do not awaken your father, Maroosia," said Mrs. Krassin, standing erect.

"I—I was frightened," whispered Musia. "I thought some one kissed me."

"I am the only one here," said her mother.

"I must have been dreaming," said Musia.

Mrs. Krassin walked quietly into her husband's room and looked down upon him sleeping. Much gentler was she than usual, as she led the girl to her room and told her it was time for her to be asleep.

"I am afraid to be alone," said Musia.

Mrs. Krassin lay on a chaise-longue by the bed and held the young girl's hand. Musia slept with long quivering sighs. The sun at last shone in at the window. Quietly she arose, looked down at the girl for a moment, and tiptoed from the room.

CHAPTER VI

Love and Conspiracy

One evening in 1920, in Vladivostok, an American talked with a Russian noblewoman. She had fled from her Russian home on foot, had walked for weeks, a vagrant, shelterless, often foodless; had caught rides on Siberian railway trains, stowed away in freight cars, or perching on their roofs—from a Sybarite to a tramp!

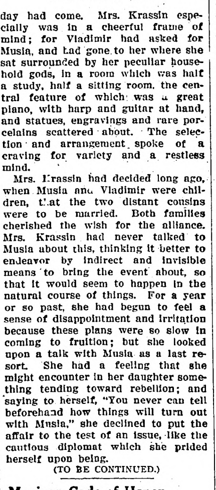
She had become a nurse for Koltchak's army, amid the most horrible conditions of lack of supplies, organization and skilled personnel—and a mortality which was terrible. She had gone ragged and dirty, and for weeks had not had even a change of underclothing. Her clothes fell away bit by bit. As her stockings wore off at the toes, she cut them off and sewed them up until they were gone—and a fellow refugee asked her, after a glimpse below her skirts, where she had obtained her nice, white stockings; and was thrown a bit of American slang derived from Red Cross workers in the information that they were her birthday hose.

She had worked for the American Red Cross as interpreter, typist, clerk and translator; for she knew Russian, Polish, French and Italian as well as English, and she could coax wonderful music from the tuneless piano in the Red Cross barracks in Vladivostok. She had lost father, mother, brothers, sister and fiancee, and was now, in what was left of an old ball dress, dancing absorbedly to the jazz music of an American warship's band in the long hall in the barracks.

"I constantly marvel," said he, "at the way you refugees manage to enjoy yourselves."

"Well," said she, smiling up at him, "one can't be always weeping!"

So it was with the Krassins: they had already acquired the resiliency of those who walk daily in peril; and after "the terror by night" had passed them, and their little group had gathered as usual under Mrs. Krassin, their general, they were in rather better spirits than usual. A peril had passed them by. They had not been notified to quit their house. Another day had come. Mrs. Krassin especially was in a cheerful frame of mind; for Vladimir had asked for Musia, and had gone to her where she sat surrounded by her peculiar household gods, in a room which was half a study, half a sitting room, the central feature of which was a great piano, with harp and guitar at hand, and statues, engravings and rare porcelains scattered about. The selection and arrangement spoke of a craving for variety and a restless mind.



Vladimir Had Asked for Musia, and Had Gone to Her.

Mrs. Krassin had decided long ago, when Musia and Vladimir were children, that the two distant cousins were to be married. Both families cherished the wish for the alliance. Mrs. Krassin had never talked to Musia about this, thinking it better to endeavor by indirect and invisible means to bring the event about, so that it would seem to happen in the natural course of things. For a year or so past, she had begun to feel a sense of disappointment and irritation because these plans were so slow in coming to fruition; but she looked upon a talk with Musia as a last resort. She had a feeling that she might encounter in her daughter something tending toward rebellion; and saying to herself, "You never can tell beforehand how things will turn out with Musia," she declined to put the affair to the test of an issue, like the cautious diplomat which she prided herself upon being.

Mexican Code of Honor Strange to Americans

In many business places of the City of Mexico, cuspidors are chained to the desk or wall to prevent some intruder from carrying them off. On the streets office boys carry thousands of dollars in canvas bags on their shoulders from banks to offices. Business men convey the day's receipts to the banks shortly before the closing hour. Their habits in this respect are known to every crook in Mexico, yet it isn't once a year they meet with a holdup. One's cook is trusted with from $10 to $20 to go to the market, and she returns and accounts for the money, yet while her employer's back is turned, she will shove five cents worth of tea, coffee or sugar into her pocket. To take money intrusted to her to do the marketing would be thieving, but in taking little things from the kitchen supplies, she is following the custom of the ages.

KNIFE WINS FOR WOMAN IN DUEL AGAINST RIFLE

Enemy Opens Battle With Shot, Then Forced to Flee From Slashes.

St. Johns, N. B.—"We investigated a report of a fight on the outskirts of New Waterford between Mrs. Gaetz and Mrs. Gardiner, and found Mrs. Gaetz was cut in the row."

Thus did the provincial police, stationed in Glace Bay, N. S., sum up one of the fiercest battles between women ever chronicled in the maritime provinces.

Challenged to Duel.

Just how the combat started nobody seems to know. At all events Mrs. Gaetz and Mrs. Gardiner, both residents and neighbors in what are known as the western front barracks of New Waterford, had a controversy. The words preceded a clawing mingle, and this was followed by a dueling challenge.

So much heat was displayed in the challenge and acceptance of the duel that the type of weapon was not specified.

The result was that, at the zero hour, Mrs. Gaetz appeared with a sawed-off rifle and Mrs. Gardiner flourished a murderous looking butcher knife. The hour for the beginning of hostilities was 8:30 p. m.

Knife vs. Rifle.

A gallery of about 100 persons witnesed the fray, which started by Mrs. Gaetz trying to shoot her foe. However, Mrs. Gardiner proved to be very aggressive at close quarters with the awe-inspiring knife. It is quite true that Mrs. Gaetz was cut in the row, as the policemen reported in their investigation, and it is also true that as a result of the wounds the chairs looked far less inviting to her than ever before. When she tried to escape from the menacing knife she was slashed some more.

Mrs. Gardiner Proved to Be Very Aggressive.

Mrs. Gaetz had no opportunity to retaliate, as her adversary was too active, and before she was carved up completely her friends rushed her to her home and summoned a doctor, who treated the several wounds. Mrs. Gardiner has been duly recognized as the winner of the unusual duel, in which a knife triumphed over rifle and bullets.

Lawyer's Auto Stolen Three Times in a Week

Washington.—A short time ago a Virginia lawyer's auto was stolen. Police located the car, abandoned and without gas two days after it was stolen. Before the lawyer could send after it, it had been filled with gas and driven away again.

Several days later it was reported that the automobile had again been found. Upon arriving on the scene, police were told a young man had just driven the auto away.

Dead Snake Foils Man's Novel Plan to End Life

Sao Paulo, Brazil.—Alcohol poisoned by snake venom was Joao Tekti's plan for ending his life. He placed two snakes taken from the Butantan Institute's snake farm in a bottle of alcohol, hoping they would poison the liquid. Later he drank from the bottle but collapsed. One of the snakes, killed by the alcohol, had slipped into his mouth.

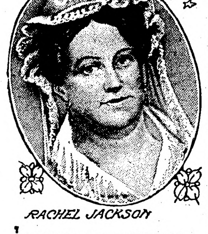
Andrew Jackson and His Rachel

ANDREW JACKSON

THE HERMITAGE, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE



RACHEL JACKSON

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

JANUARY 8 is a day for recalling a famous American fight and a famous American fighter. The fight was the battle of New Orleans, which took place on January 8, 1815, and which is unique in history as being a battle fought after the treaty of peace ending the war had been signed. The fighter was Gen. Andrew Jackson, frontiersman, lawyer by profession, but a natural military leader, hailed during the war with the Creek Indians and the war with the British by his fellow-frontiersmen as "Old Hickory" in tribute to the toughness of his fiber as a man, and later triumphantly elected by them to the Presidency as the first representative of the new American democracy to occupy the White House, after a long reign there by Virginia and Massachusetts aristocrats.

Andrew Jackson is a symbol of something so intensely American that, in the words of a recent biographer, "The people still delight in the legends of his prowess, of his lurid language, of his imperious and dictatorial temper. . . . As a small boy he comes reeling into American history with a saber cut on his head and as the years gather upon him they gleam with steel and blood. It was a roaring career, resounding to the roars of cheering multitudes, of musketry, of artillery. . . . He was a great duelist, a great soldier and a great lover. He was fiery, quixotic, honest and loyal. He was curiously romantic. . . ."

The picture of red-headed Andy Jackson, the boy, and "Old Hickory," the man, "cutting and slashing his way to power, a raucous fellow, an explosive, heavy-handed fellow, but withal a man who had a code and lived up to it," is too familiar to Americans to necessitate calling it up again on the anniversary of his great victory. In the light of these characteristics it is more interesting to call up that other picture of him, because of the vivid contrast which it presents—the picture of "the great lover" who was so "curiously romantic." For the story of Andrew Jackson and his beloved Rachel, the woman he loved to the end of his days, is one of the most beautiful romances in American history.

The story of this romance goes back to the year 1779 when Col. John Donelson, a well-to-do Virginia planter, led a party of 200 emigrants on a 2,000-mile trip by flatboat from old Fort Patrick Henry in East Tennessee (near the present city of Kingsport) to the Middle Basin of Tennessee. The trip was made down the upper branch of the Holston to the Tennessee river, down its whole length to the Ohio, up the Ohio to the Cumberland and thence up that stream to the bluffs where Col. James Robertson and an earlier party of settlers had established a frontier outpost which was to become the city of Nashville. It had taken Donelson's party four months to complete their journey and during that time they had known the horrors of Indian attack, bitter winter weather and the scourge of smallpox. Among the party was Donelson's twelve-year-old daughter, Rachel, who, despite the hardships of frontier life—or perhaps because of them—grew up to a superb womanhood. "Those who knew Rachel Donelson never tired, in their day, telling of her beauty, her goodness, her sweetness and natural charm," says John Trotwood Moore, a Tennessee historian. "She is described as being a brunette, with olive complexion and high coloring, black eyes that danced and sparkled; vivacious, kindly; lips that were true carnelian; a rare wilderness beauty."

Colonel Donelson was killed by the Indians during the early years of the settlement and his widow moved to Kentucky. There she rented a house from another frontier widow, a Mrs. Robards, whose son, Lewis, wooed and won Rachel Donelson. But the marriage was a failure from the beginning. Robards was moody, temperamental and intensely jealous of his wife. So Rachel eventually left him, returning to her mother, who had in the meantime gone back to Nashville to live. Faced with the necessity of making her own living after her husband's death, Mrs. Donelson had taken a few men boarders into her home. One of them was a young lawyer named John Overton, who brought about a reconciliation between Rachel and Robards, who then came to live with his wife and her mother.

Another boarder at the Donelson home was a red-headed young Carolinian, named Andrew Jackson, who had arrived in Nashville in 1788 and began the practice of law. Again Robards' jealousy flamed out and he accused Rachel of being in love with Jackson. The young lawyer's protest to the husband, when he heard the accusation, only made matters worse and Robards returned to Kentucky. Through Overton's intercession Rachel went there to live with him again, but finding the situation impossible, soon returned, resolved never again to live with Robards.

Robards then applied to the legislature of Virginia (since Kentucky was still a part of that state) for a divorce; and on December 29, 1790, that body passed an act permitting him to go into court to seek a divorce from his wife. Back to Tennessee came the report that the divorce had been granted in the summer of 1791, while Rachel was visiting in Natchez, Miss. Jackson, who had fallen in love with her but had not spoken of his love while she was still Robards' wife, sought her out and they were married. The young couple soon returned to Tennessee and went to live at the home, Hunter's Hill, which Jackson, now United States attorney and already marked as a man who would become famous, had established in Nashville.

Two years later Jackson and his wife learned that she was not legally divorced from Robards when the marriage ceremony in Natchez had taken place. The scandal mongers and Jackson's political enemies became busy with the tale. Robards had waited three years, after filing his first application, before finally securing the final decree of divorce. Immediately afterwards, on January 17, 1794, Jackson remarried his wife. Then he bought two dueling pistols and served notice upon his enemies that he would kill any man who assailed his wife's name or the purity of their motives when they were first married.

For a time the tongues of his enemies were silenced. Then, as the result of a dispute over a horse race, a young man named Charles Dickinson, who seems to have been made the tool of Jackson's political enemies, after a session of heavy drinking denounced Jackson as a coward and a poltroon and added the further insult of declaring that, "He lived two years with his wife before he was married to her." The result was the now-famous Dickinson-Jackson duel in which Dickinson was killed. Dickinson fired first and seriously wounded Jackson. Later Jackson said to his second, "If he had missed me, I intended to shoot in the air, but when I felt his ball plow through my ribs, I would have killed him if he had shot me through the heart."

The death of Dickinson silenced Jackson's enemies for awhile and he and his wife enjoyed a period of happiness at Hunter's Hill. Then he lost the major part of his estate of some 50,000 acres through debt, but on the part which he retained he built a group of log houses and one frame building. To the new estate he gave the name of The Hermitage. Some time later he built a handsome two-story brick house to care for the increasing number of guests who were coming to visit this rising young frontiersman. In 1796 he was elected to congress and the following year he accepted an appointment to fill a seat in the United States senate, not so much because he was ambitious himself, but because he wanted to lift his beloved Rachel to a social position which would show his pride in her. Within a year he resigned, served a short time as a judge of the Supreme court in Tennessee and then, happy in the thought that he was through with public life, looked forward to spending the remainder of his years as a gentleman planter at The Hermitage.

But the outbreak of the War of 1812 called him into service again—as the commander of Tennessee volunteers to fight the Creek Indians who had gone on the warpath. In January, 1814, he defeated the Creeks in two pitched battles and ended the war in March at the Great Horseshoe Bend on the Tallapoosa river. As the result of his splendid campaign he was made major-general in the regular army. Then came word that the British were preparing to attack New Orleans and Jackson with his small army of 2,000 men there won one of the most astounding battles in history—defeating Pakenham's British veterans and inflicting upon them a greater loss than Jackson's own force.

This victory made him the hero of the old French city and in his triumph Rachel Jackson shared. For he sent for her to come to New Orleans and there this daughter of the frontier won the hearts of the granddames of Louisiana with her naturalness and her lack of self-consciousness. They presented her with a set of topaz jewelry and gave a grand ball in her honor at which the "Victor of New Orleans" proudly led her out as his first choice as a dancing partner.

By this time Jackson had become a national figure with the promise of further public honors in store for him. His devoted Rachel hoped that he would return to Tennessee and in the quiet of life at the Hermitage recuperate his health which had been shattered by his arduous campaigns. But she soon realized that her ambition was not to be realized. As the Presidential campaign of 1824 drew near Tennessee was clamoring for her favorite son to be a candidate. He made the race, won the largest popular vote, but in the electorial college John Quincy Adams, aided by Henry Clay, was the winner.

Four years later another campaign was on and again Jackson was a candidate. The campaign of 1828 was a bitter one and once more Jackson's enemies unearthed the charge of his illegal marriage. Jackson withheld his wrath until the election was over, but he desired more ardently than ever to win so that he could vindicate his wife by making her the First Lady of the Land. That would be her supreme triumph over those who spoke ill of her. The result of the election was a victory for "Old Hickory."

When the news came to the Hermitage, Rachel Jackson, after much persuasion, set forth for Nashville to obtain a wardrobe in keeping with her new station. The honor of being the President's wife was not one which she had coveted, but her husband's wish was her law and she planned to accompany him to Washington and share in his triumph. While seated in the back parlor of a hotel in Nashville she overheard herself discussed as the woman who was hampering a great man's rise to fame. For the first time there came to her horrified ears the stories which had been circulated about her and which her husband had succeeded in keeping from her knowledge. Her servants said she returned to her home looking stunned.

Within a few days she suffered a heart attack from which she failed to rally. She had lost the desire to live. For 16 hours a heart-broken man sat at her bedside helpless to aid her. Then she died and with her died all happiness for Andrew Jackson.

Community Building

Benefit to Community in Attractive Roadway

Beautiful and attractive roadways add immeasurably to the desirability of a locality of homes, Grover O'Neill, chairman of the roadside committee of the Long Island Chamber of Commerce, told the members of the chamber at their annual meeting.

The commercialization of our arterial highways, it was pointed out, will defeat our major objective by slowing up traffic and making our entire residential environment unattractive. "There should be," he explained, "a concentration of our business activity to established business centers, or those places which a comprehensive plan indicates to be in the public interest. In the business areas themselves, we should endeavor to make these as attractive as possible. Unless we are prepared to discipline ourselves, as a community, in order to achieve our greatest goal, our growth will be seriously retarded and our communities will not be tied in to the metropolitan development, but will remain isolated and local.

"To obtain roadside attractiveness we must secure the co-operation of the property owner and in this we are confronted with the character of the owner as to whether he will co-operate for the improvement of his community or remain entirely selfish. We must also arouse public opinion in favor of roadside attractiveness to the point of action. Suitable legislation should also be obtained to bring the state and county into a position to do their full share toward creating and maintaining roadside attractiveness."

City and Rural Peoples Being Drawn Together

Largely imaginary differences between urban and rural populations at times have constituted a serious obstacle to needed legislation. But forces that have been at work in the last decade or two ought eventually to mean the total disappearance of the antagonistic points of view. Certainly, in many respects, the differences between the two groups have gone. Facts revealed by the census and obtainable from other sources point to the changes that have occurred.

For example, an official of the United States office of education points to the rapid extension of school facilities which have given thousands of rural communities advantages in this respect equivalent to those of the cities. Much remains to be done, of course, in this field. But there are numerous additional factors in the situation. They include the influence of good roads, the motor car and frequent travel, the growth in circulation of newspapers, books and magazines, the wide reach of the motion picture and, especially, of the radio.

The combined influence of those developments is certain to contribute to better understanding as well as a disappearance of superficial differences. Regional planning is a notable outcome of new recognition of mutual interest.—Kansas City Star.

Pays to Build Well

The benefits of quality building are reflected in every operation on a house. The workmen prefer to work with good materials and will naturally take more interest and more care in their work, the net result of which is a better job. The finance companies today recognize that a safe loan cannot be made on a house which is not well built and have become much more circumspect and exacting in their requirements. Formerly they were satisfied with a few casual inspections to insure that the house was on the right lot and of the right dimensions, that no restrictions were violated, and that it was brick veneer or stucco or whatever was called for.

Tax Imposed by Fire

Fire losses and the cost of fire insurance levy a $10 indirect tax on every man, woman and child each year, statisticians for the Holland Institute of Thermology estimate. The annual per capita fire loss is $5, and the cost of fire protection is about equal. The figures were developed as part of the research work in national fire prevention week.

Let Specialists Guide

When you build it is always well to consult with an architect, a competent builder and a reliable building material dealer before the design is finally selected and the contract entered into. Through education and practical experience these specialists have learned many things about home building.

Public Play Areas

The Playground and Recreation association was organized in 1906 by Theodore Roosevelt, Luther Halsey Gulick, Jacob Riis, Jane Addams and others. At that time only 41 cities had public play areas under leadership. The number has now increased to about 900 cities and towns.

Guaranteed House Here

The guaranteed house is here. Many builders of homes in all price classes are giving guarantees against defects for reasonable periods. The general belief is that in a short time only the guaranteed house will be in demand.

Capacity for Good in Life's Ordinary Evils

I have no more notion of abolishing evil than I have of abolishing shadow in the world of light, Lewis Mumford writes, in the Forum and Century. Fourier's belief that the ocean itself under a harmonized social order would turn into lemonade, and Spencer's picture of the future society as a sort of polite eternal Sunday afternoon, are merely exhibitions, as it were, of an unfathomable shallowness.

Evil and good are phases in the process of human growth; and who shall say which is the better teacher? Illness, error, defeat, frustration, disintegration, malicious accident, all these elements are as much in the process of life as waste, nutrition and repair. The very forces which, if triumphant, would destroy life are needful to season experience and deepen understanding.

Observing this, the popular religions of the past have celebrated almost solely the negative aspects of existence. But, in release from their superstitions, one must not commit the opposite error of neglecting the role of evil and forgetting its value. Customs and actions we habitually call good have large capacities for mischief; who does not know the charity that poisons the giver and the purity that offends common decency?

Similarly, the evils of life have a large capacity for good; and the mature person knows that they must be faced, embraced, assimilated, and that to shun them, or innocently hope to eliminate them, is to cling to an existence without perspective or depth—a child's picture done in pretty chalks, charming perhaps, but only that.

Like arsenic, evil is a tonic in grains and a poison in ounces. The real problem that justifies every assault upon war and poverty and disease, is to reduce it to amounts that can be spiritually assimilated.

Europe Can No Longer Sneer at American Art

Architect Whitney Warren said at a dinner in New York the other day:

"Europe sneered once at American art, but the tables are turned now.

"An American architect disembarked at Southampton, and on the train ride to Waterloo he fell asleep. But the whistle of the engine awakened him as the train passed through Woking, and he stared out at the town's architectural horrors and said:

"'Good heavens, what is this?'

"'This is Woking,' said an Englishman.

"The American leaned back and shut his eyes again. He muttered: "'If this is Woking, let me dream again.'"

BABES LIVE IN A GLASS HOUSE

Here are two babes that live in a glass house.

They are Albert and Alberta, twins, and reigning favorites in the Children's building at Glen Lake sanatorium, Minneapolis. Born at the institution a few days after their mother had entered in the advanced stages of tuberculosis, the twins were immediately removed from danger of infection, and placed in the glass enclosed room in the Children's building.

Here they may be viewed through the glass partition but only nurses and doctors may enter the room, or touch them. These precautions are necessary, the nurses state, because children in the first years of life are particularly susceptible to tuberculosis. The twins are perfect specimens of healthy babyhood.

Protection from tuberculosis of every child and adult is the goal of the Christmas Seal campaign, which is now in progress.

Pump House Burns

The old fire bell, perched high in the tower on the Village Hall called out its warning that something was being destroyed shortly before 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday.

The fire, which caused great excitement for a few minutes, had started from an unknown cause in the village pump house, where all the machinery was operating first rate in the morning. The building was completely destroyed, as was several dollars' worth of equipment.

Some damage was done to the Village Hall also, as it caught fire on the wall next to the pump house.

According to O. E. Sovde, Fire Chief, there will be new arrangements made at the Village water works.

Speaker of House

Oscar A. Swenson

A dirt farmer has been elected speaker of the Minnesota House of Representatives for the first time in many years, thus placing the presiding position in both branches in the hands of dirt farmers, a situation unparalleled in the state's history. Oscar A. Swenson of Nicollet county was chosen speaker of the House at the convening of the Legislature on Tuesday by a unanimous vote.

This is Mr. Swenson's tenth term from the 15th district, St. Peter.

Pointers on Feeding

Any cow likes a clean manger to eat from. The manger should be cleaned before each feeding, of all waste material, such as corn and hay stalks, chaff, etc.

In order to insure a sweet fine flavored cream, never feed before milking. Silage, rutabagas, and many ground feeds impart bad flavors to the milk and from there it is carried to the cream.

Proper feeding helps dairy profits. Address, Bulletin Dept., University Farm, St. Paul, Minnesota, for free bulletins.

Arens Advises Senate

Members-elect of the Minnesota state senate were asked to consider a written request of their presiding officer, Lieutenant Governor-elect Henry Arens, to use better judgement this year in their appointment of senate employes—and to reduce the total senate staff by at least a third.

Mr. Arens for some time has been considering the possibility of saving the taxpayers' money by using no more "hired help" than is necessary and by employing men and women trained to do certain tasks, instead of merely providing salaries and a little or no work for a large number of persons, many of them relatives of the senators.

"There were 40 or 50 men in the 1929 session who had nothing to do, so they were assigned as door keepers and gallery attendants," Mr. Arens said. "There was a shortage of stenographers, however, and consequently the senate had to hire some extra ones.

"Instead of suggesting the names of persons who might have nothing to do after appointment, I am asking the senators to decide on one appointment and propose that person's name at a caucus."

A pre-session caucus was held this year and the appointments were considered and committee assignments studied.

The senate last session had 119 employes for the 67 members. They were paid from $4 a day for pages to $15 a day for the chief clerk. Mr. Arens believes 70 "efficient employes" would be enough.

Editors Note: One local farmer who read this news item before we set it up stated that some of the same rules should be applied here at home in regards to giving your relatives the first chance to help out.

4-H Club To Be Reorganized

Mr. H. A. Pflughoeft, Crookston, 4-H Club Leader for Northwestern Minnesota, will be in Holt, Tuesday, January 20, for the purpose of helping the re-organization of the Holt 4-H Club. Holt has had an enviable record in the past in its 4 H Club work and more and better things are hoped for. At present the Club is organized with Miss Hermia Saastad, as President and Miis Ruby Thompson as the Vice-President.

This work is very valuable and should be encouraged as fully as possible. Mr. Pflughoeft will present the purpose and ideals of club work, and there will be short talks by Doris Leiran, one of the present club members, and Bennie Thompson, a club member with several years experience, who will tell what he has gained from club work, and by Supt. Perry.

It is not necessary to have expensive equipment, or high priced purebred calves or lambs to enter club work. There are a number of projects open, and while possible some are not as interesting as others, all are valuable for the lessons that they teach in careful painstaking effort with a definite end to be attained. It is not the prizes which make club work valuable, but the lessons in citizenship which it offers.

The projects which may be entered are the Dairy and Beef Calf Clubs Lanmb, Pig, Poultry and Gardening for both boys and girls, and also the Sewing, Canning and Baking Clubs which are usually of interest to girls only.

Parents and all interested are invited. This is not only for the children attending the Holt School, but for those of the entire community. Remember the time, January 20, at 1:45, and the place Holt High School Auditorium, and the purpose, a bigger and better Holt 4-H Club.

Strange Sports of Other Countries

Jai Alai, Cuba's Popular Pastime, Is the Fastest Game in World.

Washington.—"Foreign visitors who are amazed at Tom Thumb golf and backgammon may come from lands which have pastimes equally strange and puzzling to the average American," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"Cubans, for instance, have their high-speed jai alai (pronounced high-a-lie). If any sport has a right to the title 'fastest in the world' this whirlwind Spanish game is in the forefront.

"Jai alai is played on a long indoor court with one side wall and two end walls. The players occupy the court space in common, batting the ball against the wall until a player on one side fails to return it, when the opposing team scores a point. Instead of rackets the players use basket-woven bats, crescent-shaped, with one end laced to the hand.

"A team of two players must protect an area of 7,500 square feet. If the rebound is close to the wall of the court the cesta, or crescent-shaped bat, must be manipulated with the utmost agility and skill. Cuban crowds go into a frenzy watching its thrills.

Another Scotch Game.

"When Scotland's golf greens and fairways are covered with ice and snow a popular sport is curling, a game in which players glide large, rounded stones down a smooth stretch of ice toward a mark called a tee. Four players, each with two stones, form a side. If the curler cannot reach the tee he tries to leave his stone so as to block an opposing player. Like quoits, the players shot nearest to the tee scores a point.

"In the Philippine islands the Bontoc Igorots have a remarkable pastime which consists in slapping the thigh of an opponent with the flat of the hand. One man sits on a bench with the thigh exposed, and his opponent slaps him with all the strength he can muster.

"After the stroke, judges examine the thigh of the man who has been hit, and if the blow has been sufficiently hard to cause the blood to show beneath the skin, the striker has won the game, but if not, then the opponents change places. The first contestant who causes the blood to show beneath the other's skin is declared the winner.

"Every ocean traveler knows shuffleboard, also called shovelboard. Round wooden disks are propelled by long, notched sticks toward a numbered checkerboard about twenty-five feet away. The game is to land the disks in the squares with the highest numbers, and to keep them from stopping in other squares which subtract from the score.

Hunting on Foot.

"Hunting has long been associated with the English, but one form of their hunting is very little known outside of England. This is beagling, or following the hare on foot with beagles, a dwarf hunting dog. Unlike the fox or the stag, the hare is very short-winded. It soon outdistances both hunters and hounds, but, as it quickly tires, they may catch it if they have not been side-tracked on false trails. The hare, however, really has a sporting chance, because its scent is the faintest of all game, and it grows steadily weaker as the hare nears the end of its strength.

"Miniature golf may not be new to these shores. Early chroniclers tell of New Amsterdam Dutch burghers playing 'kolf' on small courses near taverns. After a round or two the 'kolfers' retired to the tavern for a bowl of punch, lingering over it in typical 'nineteenth hole' fashion until the room was filled with the aroma of their long clay pipes.

Backgammon, in one form or another, has been traced to the Romans, the pre-Columbian Mexicans, and the Burmanese. Even Plato alludes to a game in which dice were thrown and men were placed after due deliberation."

Pee-Wee Money Soon Wears Out, U. S. Finds

Washington.—The Treasury department is worried because the new small size paper money apparently is not lasting as long as the larger bills, a house committee was told. The treasury is getting back more $5 bills and fewer $20 than with the larger money.

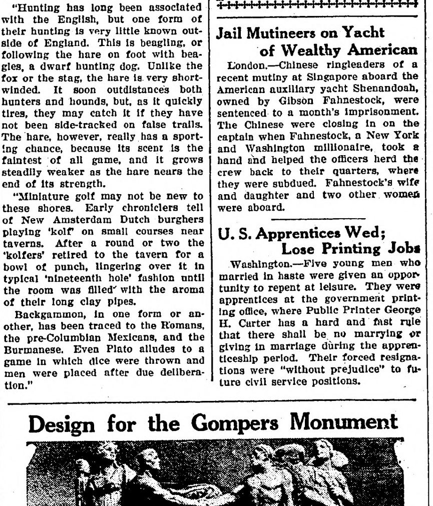
Jail Mutineers on Yacht of Wealthy American

London.—Chinese ringleaders of a recent mutiny at Singapore aboard the American auxiliary yacht Shenandoah, owned by Gibson Fahnestock, were sentenced to a month's imprisonment. The Chinese were closing in on the captain when Fahnestock, a New York and Washington millionaire, took a hand and helped the officers herd the crew back to their quarters, where they were subdued. Fahnestock's wife and daughter and two other women were aboard.

U. S. Apprentices Wed; Lose Printing Jobs

Washington.—Five young men who married in haste were given an opportunity to repent at leisure. They were apprentices at the government printing office, where Public Printer George H. Carter has a hard and fast rule that there shall be no marrying or giving in marriage during the apprenticeship period. Their forced resignations were "without prejudice" to future civil service positions.

Design for the Gompers Monument



This design, submitted by Robert Aitken, New York sculptor, was selected by the Fine Arts commission as the one to be followed in the memorial to Samuel Gompers, for many years chief of the American Federation of Labor. The memorial will be erected, at a cost of $100,000, two blocks from the labor headquarters in Washington.

BEGGAR BY DAY, HE WAS SULTAN IN CAVE HAREM

Modern Jekyll and Hyde in Mexico Is Bared Through Jealousy of Woman.

Mexico City.—A crippled beggar on the streets by day and a sultan in his underground harem by night was the double role lived for years by an ingenius resident of Coyoacan until betrayed through a jealous woman.

Jose Ramirez, now called "Don Juan of the Wondrous Court," was a successful beggar. But the man was ambitious and not satisfied with the results of his own efforts. So, having charm for the fair sex, he capitalized his attractions and enlisted in his service of begging six of his feminine admirers. These he sent into the streets for alms and at night they returned to share his caresses and to deliver their collections.

The court of the "beggar-sultan," who found himself enriched by the contributions of his helpers, was maintained in a degree of elegance not compatible with his means of livelihood in a cave near the town. Here he dropped his pose of a cripple and lived in comfort.

Friction arose in the harem because Ramirez failed to divide his attention equally and the slighted woman betrayed him to the police.

Officials visited the cave and ended Ramirez' game. The "cripple" fled from the police. His companions were held.

Huge Aqueduct to Carry Water Over 82 Miles

Manchester, Enland.—An aqueduct 82 miles long between Haweswater lake and Manchester, costing $50,000,000, is to supply this city with its water for a century.

Driving 30 miles of tunnel 9 feet in diameter through the iron-hard slopes of a crater is one of the most difficult tasks in the Manchester corporation's scheme for providing the water supply. When completed, six years hence, the aqueduct will carry 90,000,000 gallons of water daily, running the 82 miles by gravity.

A great dam is being built at Mardale to bring the lake up to the necessary level. Haweswater will then become the second largest lake in England.

The tunnel section of the aqueduct is to be lined with steel and stone and after the water pipes are laid there will still be sufficient room for workmen to carry out repairs. Before the pipes can be installed, however, it is estimated that about 150,000 tons of earth and rock will have to be blasted away, and some 250 tons of explosives will be used.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS and JEWELS

By WM. L. GASTON

HERE I am, old world! The nineteen hundred and thirty-one youngster you have been expecting. I am just from the limbo of things to come. I have brought you a splendid ransom. In this bag I have twelve caskets of jewels. They are all yours—birth stones, bringing fine gifts for the world.

JANUARY, the first casket; garnets of power; great drifts of snow, sparkling fields of frost and ice. Cold mornings. Cold stars studding the skys of night.

FEBRUARY brings amethysts of love with something of hate. A thawing time and a freezing time—a clash of warmth and cold. Last hard struggle of winter.

MARCH is red with bloodstones. They loosen the wild winds and blustering storms. The earth grows nervous with the pain of coming life.

APRIL—fine casket of diamonds. They bring purity. They bring sunshine and rain. The first born life lies on the breast of mother earth.

MAY has green emeralds and the wild flowers. Color everywhere. Sow the fields and expect the harvest.

JUNE has brought pearls—pearls of health. Full blossomed roses are here, and brides stand at the altar—a splendid suggestion of garden and home.

JULY brings rubies for happiness and with them reddens apples and ripens the grain. It brings the warmth of full summer and the days of the year's decline.

AUGUST opens a casket of sardonyx, the full round of happiness. It brings maturity. Beat out the grain. Market the fruit. Eat, drink and be merry.

SEPTEMBER flashes sapphires, tokens of constancy. It brings purple vineyards and treads the wine press. Here flows happiness for the earth.

OCTOBER and opals. Fill storehouses with plenty for the winter. Gather the last of the crops. Here are robes of crimson and gold for the landscape. The first blight of death is the brightest flush of beauty.

NOVEMBER lays a topaz on the altar, and with the first wand of winter strikes the leaves from the trees and the truth of things stands out stark and naked.

DECEMBER carries the turquoise of counted prosperity—the prosperity of the year. More white robes for the aged year—robes of hoar frost and snow. From here flows a sullen stream into the past. And here on its heaveless breast I launch my barque and pass away on its tides.

The Old and the New Year

by

Florence Harris Wells

"NO CROWD to watch the old year out and spring some surprise on, I suppose, now that we live in the country." Ned Halliday was polishing his skis which had been his steady companion since his return to college.

"Mother is concocting something, don't worry," Ruth, his sister, answered, as she finished the waxing of her own skis. "Are you getting tired of the outdoor sports we were looking forward to so keenly? I'm not, if you ask me."

"No, I'm not, either. But ever since I can remember I've looked forward to company Near Year's eve, and the surprise stunt ushering out the old and welcoming the New Year."

"Well, ease your mind. The whole countryside has been invited. Mother's ingenuity may be sorely taxed but she has never failed yet, and she won't this time."

The piano, phonograph and radio furnished the music for the various dances and games. All was gayety, song and laughter as the midnight hour approached. Suddenly they were in total darkness. Above the laughter and ejaculations a sepulchral voice announced:

"Behold the light of your forefathers!" and borne through the great rooms by a decrepit old man, dimly flickered a light.

"This passes!" the voice announced. Now through the rooms a procession of pioneers marched bearing genuine old-fashioned tallow dips.

The voice spoke again. This time less weirdly:

"This, too, shall pass!"

At the corners of each room kerosene lamps were lighted and hanging lamps hitherto unnoticed.

Over the radio came the ringing of bells and blowing of whistles and again the rooms were ablaze with light; for the old had passed. The New Year was born!

What Would You Wish?

by

MARY GRAHAM BONNER

IT HAS become a world of wonders, of mechanical and electrical marvels, of amazing discoveries on how much more can be accomplished by means of air waves.

The only sphere in which we cannot work these marvels is within our own thoughts and hopes and dreams.

Man can wing his fancies and his knowledge of the ether and can link actualities with the air and the space above us. But he cannot make his own dreams come true—perhaps that is why dreams will always be dreams and never will they become commonplace facts.

And then—if you could wish this New Year, what would you wish? Could you combine everything into one wish? Could you absorb all your dreams in one?

If you were asked to name your one wish could you do it? It is like the old fairy tales where those who were to be granted wishes began to use them up with such careless haste.

Possibly you will say that you know your dearest wish—and yet wouldn't you want other wishes granted, too? Maybe your wish is to live a long and complete and satisfactory life; maybe it is to be well fixed in comforts for the rest of your life, maybe it is to feel you can afford to take a rest some time, some day, and leisurely enjoy the beauties of nature.

Whether or not your wish will ever come true, whether or not your several wishes will ever be realized, one of the loveliest things in life is to dream of perfection in this world.

The old earth can be so radiated by your happiness, the scene can be so glowing as your day dreams carry you on.

May your wishes for the New Year come true. But above all may you never give up wishing—for the desire to wish is the hope that makes life so beautiful.

Floodlights That Color Exterior of Buildings

The night scenes in the cities will become gayer than ever if the scheme of polychromatizing comes into general use. The first polychromatic floodlight system operated by Thyratron tube control has been installed on a building at Decatur, Ill. The structure is rectangular up to the sixth story, and from that point a central tower-like section rises in successive steps for nine stories more. Nearly 200 floodlights are employed in the exterior lighting. The central section of the facade is a luminous white panel up to the eleventh floor. From there to the top the polychromatic system tints each side of the exterior with a different shade of glowing illumination, changing constantly on each of the four sides.—Washington Star.

"Wandering Jew" Legends

A legend of a surviving witness of the Crucifixion, who is represented as the victim of a curse, was long current in Jerusalem, and is frequently referred to in records of travels in the Holy land.

His name is generally given as Joannes Buttareus, in Italian as Buttadio, and is translated as "God-smiter." There is an old Italian legend that tells of a similar punishment inflicted on a soldier who struck Christ before the High Priest, and later on this soldier was identified as Melbus, whose ear was cut off by Peter.

The first suffrage privilege permitting voting on school matters was given women in New York state in 1880.

Was a Problem

"Mary Jane caused me many anxious moments," says Mrs. G. G. McDowell, 4035 Wentworth Ave., So., Minneapolis, Minn. "She was listless, weak, had no appetite.

"She suffered a lot from colds until I began giving her California Fig Syrup. It made her strong, able to avoid colds; gave her a good appetite and digestion. She is the picture of health, now."

For over 50 years, California Fig Syrup has been helping bilious, weak, headachy, constipated babies and children. Doctors by thousands recommend this pure vegetable product. Children love its flavor. It acts gently to open the bowels in colds or children's diseases. Bowels become regular with its use and remain that way.

THE NEW MESDAMES' FRESCO

By FANNIE HURST

(©. McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

UNTIL Ella was fourteen, the loveliest uniform in all the world was the one worn by her mother. She seldom, if ever, saw her out of it, except on magic Thursday afternoons when they shopped, had their supper in a little self-service restaurant and went to a motion picture theater together. On these days, Ella's mother slipped into a plain drab-colored frock and a dark-brown coat with a coarse fur around the neck. She lost luster.

In the big, beautiful house on the top of the hill where they had lived ever since Ella could remember, her mother had worn her bright gray, highly-finished alpaca frock with a sheer patch of organdie apron in front and a crisp organdie cap on the top of her pretty brown hair.

Mrs. Fresco, a large, florid woman whose hands gleamed with jewels even at breakfast and whose short, asthmatic breathing was one of the dominant noises in the household, came, as the asthmatic affliction increased its hold of her, to depend more and more on the bright person of Ella's mother.

"Annie" was Ella's mother's given name. Mrs. Fresco found it too commonplace, so the very first month that Annie, handicapped by her four-year-old child, had succeeded in gaining employment in the Fresco house, her mistress had refused to call her by any other name than Antoinette.

The room occupied by Antoinette and her daughter was a little, slap-sided one up under the eaves of the beautiful old house.

If Antoinette sometimes found her role in that household almost unbearable, her little girl was the last one to know it. As Mrs. Fresco, her life fraught with the complexities of her role as social dictator, grew heavier and more asthmatic, her demands upon her maid sometimes became intolerable. And yet only too well Antoinette realized, and was made to realize by Mrs. Fresco, her difficult and anomalous situation. Widowed women with children did not find it easy to obtain positions. Antoinette knew that from bitter experience. The thought of placing her little girl in an institution was simply outside her reckoning. And so, throughout the years, Antoinette remained on.

There were, after all, great advantages in the situation. Mr. Fresco, a great, hearty man of fifty, was kindness and consideration itself. With all her heart, Antoinette pitied him the nervous, petty, socially ambitious, exacting wife. He was generous and indulgent. He scarcely ever arrived in that house without some little knick-knack for Ella. Everything he did showed consideration and kindness for Antoinette.

Then there was Dick, the only child of the household. In the early years, Dick and Ella, in the enormous democracy of childhood, had played together among the swans or in the beautiful gardens that surrounded the home. But Dick had shot up into slim boyhood while Ella was still in rompers. For the past ten years, the most exciting events in that household had been his all-too-sporadic visits from boarding school and college.

Yes, there were advantages to remaining at the Frescos'. Antoinette tried to keep this realization staunchly to the front of her mind on those occasions when Mrs. Fresco made life unbearable or when the heavy social routine of the household with its luncheons, musicales, teas, dinners, banquets, balls and house parties made the burden of work and responsibility almost crushing to the slim shoulders of Antoinette.

When Mrs. Fresco died one night in a paroxysm of suffocation, her passing was a source of comment in the social circles of the large cities of both America and Europe. She had succeeded in gouging out what she had most craved for herself—social eminence. As a poor girl she had married Alexander Fresco and, out of a gripping determination, had accomplished what she had set out to do.

But she had died socially secure.

Antoinette remained on in the household, conducted it for Mr. Fresco after his wife's death.

When Ella was a beautiful seventeen and lovely as the first jonquil that grew in spring beside the swan lake, Dick Fresco came home from college, a new graduate, eloped with her in an airplane one afternoon and married her in an adjacent city.

The young heir to Fresco millions, the young college graduate, just home and prepared to enter into his father's many activities, had done the unthinkable—married the daughter of a servant girl.

Strange, with what an imperturbability the ruddy, genial father of this nice frank youngster took his blow. The two children were received back into the household.

Nothing was done to change the status of Antoinette, who by this time was a little gray at the temples of her pretty brown head and who was now occupying the role of housekeeper. Importunings of her daughter, her son-in-law and even Mr. Fresco to the contrary notwithstanding, Antoinette continued to wear a bunch of keys at her belt and to occupy the small room under the eaves.

There was something strangely tenacious in the benign makeup of the girl Ella. Time after time, in order to solve the curious situation of this household, Antoinette importuned her son-in-law and daughter to let her leave in order to ease the curious dilemma.

No doubt about it, Antoinette was doing her daughter an injustice by insisting that she retain her humble role; no doubt about it, Ella was doing her mother an injustice by refusing to permit her the alternative of leaving the house. And yet, the bond between these two was so close. Years of propinquity between mother and daughter in the humble quarters they had formerly occupied in that home of magnificence, had drawn them closely, irretrievably together. The mere thought of separation was mutually unbearable to them both. The young Dick, buoyantly, youthfully in love, minimized the complication and accepted in embarrassed good humor the role of his mother-in-law, trying to evade its more serious aspects by treating her in a playful manner.

"Antoinette, I say, you haven't performed your tasks well this morning," or, "Antoinette, I am afraid we will have to dispense with your services as housekeeper if you insist upon such a familiar manner with Mrs. Fresco."

These little witticisms indulged in so good naturedly by the husband of Ella, helped. And yet, not all the facetiousness in the world could save the situation from the curious mixture of pathos, irony and absurdity which characterized it.

Ella felt it. Dick felt it. Antoinette felt it.

Certainly the elder Fresco himself must have felt it, although through all the period of these attempts at adjustments, he maintained his jovial kind of aloofness, keeping well out of the controversy.

A curious and anomalous situation, if ever there was one.

It hurt the tender and pretty little Ella to sit down at a table at which her own mother was not present. It pained her young and stalwart husband. It embarrassed Fresco.

For months after this marriage, the social world that had at one time poured into this house stood off bewildered and dumbfounded, and yet there were going on in the financial world rumors that revealed the fact that Alexander Fresco, in the little time since the death of his wife, had practically tripled his many millions.

There came a time when, despite the catastrophic thing that had happened in that home, the socially exclusive found it the better part of valor to call upon the new little Mrs. Fresco, Jr.

Cards were left on the silver salvers in the hallway that had been left there, off and on, for years and years, but, now that they were applied to little Ella, it fairly took away the breath of Antoinette and her daughter.

The time had come for a strategic decision to take place in that household. When the social world had set its stamp of approval finally upon the new little wife of Dick Fresco, it was time to begin to prepare her for the complex and difficult role that stretched ahead.

Then something happened that again threw out of focus every single precedent in the home. At ten o'clock one Sunday morning, standing in the superb drawing room of his home, as abashed as a boy of fourteen, Alexander Fresco asked Antoinette to marry him.

At three o'clock that same afternoon, by the procedure of special license and special dispensation, the event of their wedding took place in that same beautiful drawing room, the sole witnesses to the occasion being the servants of the household and Mr. and Mrs. Fresco, Jr.

It was again a matter of months before a stunned community was able to pull itself together and decide upon its next strategic move in regard to the Frescos.

It was again a matter of international comment the way in which Alexander Fresco had increased his many millions and, once more society capitulated, and began leaving cards for the two Mrs. Frescos.

But by this time a new and monopolizing interest had crashed into this household so that the visiting cards lying on the tables had little or no effect. It was not that the Mrs. Frescos, senior and junior, meant to be rude. On the contrary, they were a lovely and amiable pair of matrons. But there was no time. On the day of Alexander Fresco's marriage to Antoinette, he had made over to her in her own name the sum of five million dollars to do with as she wished.

Out of that superbly endowed amount, Antoinette and her daughter Ellen had cooked up a plan. It was a plan that, as the years moved on, was to grow to such proportions that it monopolized all of their time, leaving little for social concerns that had to do with the visiting cards on the hall table.

Mrs. Alexander Fresco who, throughout the lean and heart-breaking years, had known deprivation, has built out of her five-million-dollar fund one of the greatest philanthropic organizations in the world. By this time, Alexander and his son Dick are almost equally interested in it.

The Frescos, all four of them, are a busy, constructive group of people. Too concerned with humanity to find time for the social problems presented by the engraved cards of the elite of the countryside, as they gather dust on the hall tables.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expresses fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Mrs. Krassin conducts Vilinsky in an inspection of the home and contrives that he shall not see Ilya. The commissar brutally insults Musia. Mrs. Krassin's thoughts are all of Ilya. Musia feels herself defenseless and wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women."

"The revolution is to blame," said she one day to the little princess. "Girls are not what they used to be. The restraints are gone which used to hold young people in the proper course and make real people of them."

In her heart she felt that it would be a relief to see Musia married. Even after the affectionate passage of last night, the old feeling came over her that her daughter was something of a burden. She would be much freer to move about, in war or peace, if Musia were disposed of in the traditional way. She was conscious of this feeling when Vladimir had asked for Musia that day. She blamed both of them for dilatoriness—in which she was quite right. They were equally vacillatory.

"Chances to get well married," said she to the little old cousin, "do not come to any girl every day. One or two real matches in her whole life—that's usually about all. The rest of them are not worth while. The thing is, to be clever, and not let the good chances go by. I'm sure Musia never thinks of this. Chances scarcely ever return!"

She sighed bitterly. Her good chances, she reflected, had been allowed to go by. In truth, however, she had little to blame herself for. She had taken advantage of her only offer; but what matron of her age is willing to confess so much, even to herself? She could think of several occasions in her life when she thought as she looked back upon events, just a little more appreciation on her part of the good qualities of certain gentlemen would have changed things fundamentally for herself.

Alone with Musia, Vladimir was quite a different person than when in the formidable presence of Mrs. Krassin; for he sat or almost lay in a comfortable armchair, his long legs extended and wide apart, watching Musia with the manner of amused superiority, the air of bon enfant which was characteristic of him, and which in fact, was affected by most officers of his class. He was a great friend of every one he met. The old ladies of his circle, to whom he always paid court in his mocking way, and whom he teased by telling them of the enormities he was about to commit, like joining the Bolsheviki, were a unit in appraising him as one of the nicest, most open-hearted boys in the world. Perhaps Mrs. Krassin was the only one of them who would have been glad to suggest some possible changes in his behavior.

"I am very sorry," said Musia, "that mother is opposed to Ilya's joining your organization."

"What organization?" inquired Vladimir, with a surprised air.

"As if you did not know! I think it is his duty—positively!"

In case of a girl more than anyone else, the manner of saying things is much more important than the matter. Whatever Musia said was uttered in a soft voice which made one wish to hear more; with the soft voice went a pleasant, ingratiating manner; and if she only said that it was a fine day, there was an air of suppressed enthusiasm in her intonation that would have been valuable to a pleader. It made Vladimir think of the difference between this little girl and her brother.

"Duty!" he scoffed playfully. "Where did you pick up that old word?"

"He's young and strong. He is an officer. Who will fight for Russia if he will not?"

"Rattlebrains like me, perhaps."

"His friends are in danger. We do not know how great the danger. But neither do we know of the danger in lying perdu as Ilya does. I should take the honorable course without trying to calculate the percentage of danger on the two sides!"

There was something more than a habit of speech in her manner as she said this; her face glowed with enthusiasm. Vladimir found his admiration stirring his heart a little more than usual.

"I see you read Shakespeare," said he, picking up a volume. "Do you remember the line which goes 'Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety'? Well, for Ilya as well as for me, I think the bold course the wise one as well. As to the matter of honor, each must be his own judge."

"Mother insists that it is wiser, safer, and in all ways better," said Musia, "for him to sit and wait until the storm blows over."

"This storm did not blow up," replied Vladimir. "It was blown up. It will not blow over. It will have to be blown over."

"How sententious you are!" Musia was laughing at him now. But she flared up in soft indignation again. "I think it is a shame to the family. See how other mothers encourage their sons to fight, and are proud of them!"

"Your mother is a wise woman, Musia."

"I don't say anything at all to Ilya," went on Musia. "But when I think of and see these beasts of Bolsheviki—" She stopped, blushing in a little confusion. Vladimir stared at her, surprised at her strange embarrassment—"I feel as if I ought to protest as strongly as I can. And then—I think of Ilya's safety. He ought to know better himself. I wish I were in his boots!"

"I think," suggested Vladimir, "that your mother is not really keeping Ilya back. No one could stop him if he really wanted to—to do what you would do 'if you were in his boots.' I think, my dear, that he has no taste for that sort of thing."

To this Musia had no reply; and she sat for a long time looking off into the distance. This pleased Vladimir, for this morning he was more than was usually the case inclined to waive all discussion, to which she was rather prone, and to sit with her and look at her. Perhaps she felt this and was willing to give him the opportunity. His "my dear" was a little advance on his part; though their relations were based on a long-standing comradeship occasionally taking the form of light flirtation. Their feelings toward each other were of the sort likely to be developed between a pretty girl and a young man thrown constantly together in the narrow circle of a provincial city; but lately they both felt in them a warmer current approaching love.

She rose and stood silhouetted against the black polish of the great piano. There was something insubstantial and dreamy, he thought, about her eyes, about the delicacy of her hands and feet, something, in all the perils of the situation which surrounded all of them, very pathetic and appealing.

"So much the worse," said she finally, "if he has no taste for his duty!"

Vladimir was too much engrossed in the study of the straw-colored wisps of her hair about her forehead, and her cheeks flushed with high enthusiasm, to make any reply.

"She is the only girl for me!"

He found himself saying this to himself; and then smiled at his own sentimentalism. Was this a time for philandering? Why tonight, perhaps, he would be skulking through the country like a hunted wolf toward the Cossack front, with the hounds of Loris in full cry behind. Musia felt this cross-current of feeling like a chill. Yet, he thought again, why not take the sweet with the bitter? In another month they might both be dead—or triumphant. And Musia felt this counter-current in his thoughts like a warm south breeze.

"I wish I were a man!" she exclaimed vehemently.

Salem Made Famous by Its Ships and Traders

During the Revolution little Salem, under leadership of Elias Hasket Derby, furnished and equipped 158 privateers, carrying 2,000 guns and manned by 6,000 men, equal to the entire population of the city, writes Walter Prichard Eaton in the Washington Star. At the end of the war, naturally, Salem found itself with a large fleet, much too large for coastwise trade, and a large staff of skippers and seamen trained to adventure and daring navigation. Besides the ships and seamen, the little town possessed, in Derby and others, owners and merchants of imagination and initiative. She was all set for great things.

And great things came with a rush. The Derbys, the Crowinshields and the rest sent their ships around Good Hope, to the East Indies, and long before the East Indian traders knew the names of Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore or Boston, they knew well the name of Salem. Derby's famous ship, the Grand Turk, in 1784 was the first American merchantman to round the Cape of Good Hope.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

American Birds Guests of Great Ocean Liner

The Olympic arrived at Southampton the other day with the remains of a "deck cargo" of a rather unusual kind. Hundreds of small birds of the sparrow and finch type had been carried out to sea on the liner when she left New York; they were roosting in her rigging when she left at night, and at dawn found themselves too far out at sea to attempt a return flight. These stowaways—or flyaways—therefore attached themselves to the great vessel until she came within sight of the French and English coasts, when they went ashore without complying with any of the passport regulations or making any declarations of alien birth and nationality. The news version of their exploit suggests, it will be gathered, that the whole trip was an accident, but that may be to underestimate the deliberately terrestrial attractions of the modern liner. It may have been less of an accident than a compliment; a tribute as profound as it was sincere to the success with which what was once a vessel has been transformed into a hotel. Those sparrows would have been perfectly happy under the eaves of a Grand Babylon—and if they noted palm courts as they fluttered round the berthed liner in New York how were they to understand that these were not the same sort of furniture as on Fifth avenue? They attached themselves to what they thought was a hotel—and when they found that it was a floating one the hotel was still vast enough to accommodate them without difficulty. Indeed, it ought to have been very glad to see them. Palm courts and shop windows are all very well as incidents in the urban illusion, but nothing could be better than a few sparrows for putting the finishing touches to an accurate reconstruction of city life at sea.—Manchester (Eng.) Guardian.

Mules Have to Carry Autos Over Mountains

Automobiles are carried by mules in the interior of Columbia. Bucaramanga, in the mountains, gets its motor cars in this way from the nearest railroad terminus, at El Conchal, 22 miles distant.

The cars are disassembled as completely as possible to avoid overloading the animals.

About 25 different packages are necessary in the knocking down process, one unit containing the motor, another the chassis, a third the body, and the rest containing such parts as the battery, springs, wheels, tires and so on. For the heavier units two mules are necessary, two wooden supports or bars being laid across their backs. The other parts are strapped on the backs of individual mules.

EXCESS ACID SICKENS—GET RID OF IT!

Sour stomach, indigestion, gas, usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. Food sours in the stomach.

Correct excess acid with an alkali. The best form of alkali is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It works instantly. The stomach becomes sweet. Your heartburn, gas, headache, biliousness or indigestion has vanished!

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the pleasant way—the efficient way to relieve the effects of over-acidity.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia has been standard with doctors for over 50 years. 25c and 50c bottles at druggists.

Agents Can Make $15 Daily selling Dan-D-Shyne polish to homes, garages, stores and other agents. Big commission to managers. Send 50c for $1 size, either furniture or auto. $1 for both. Dan-D-Shyne Polish Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

Principle and Party

The retort, "Damn your principles! Stick to your party," was not made by an American statesman. Lord Beaconsfield (Disraeli) said that to Bulwer Lytton when the latter told the prime minister he could not vote for a certain parliamentary measure because it was against his principles.

School Notes

First and Second Grades

The 1st and 2d grade room had many visitors last week. They were Hermia Saastad, Gertrude Reierson, Pierce Hanson, Dorothy Hanson, Dale Lorentson, Stanley Haukeness.

The pupils of the 2d grade made up a story called "Christmas Fun":

"Shall we tell you what we did during Christmas vacation?

"What would you like to hear about it?

"First of all we played with our play-things. Some of them were dolls, trucks, trains, tractors, horns, puzzles, Kiddie Kars, Dutch windmills, and a parrot.

"Besides playing with our toys we went visiting and we had a lot of fun. We also had lots of goodies during vacation."

The 1st grade people are going to have two new books.

Third and Fourth Grades

The third and fourth grade industrial arts class are busy.

The boys are making letter holders. The girls are making handkerchief bags and doll novelties.

The third grade took their first self testing drill on Monday: They did very well.

The following are poems made up in the 4th grade Hygiene class. They are studying fruits.

APPLE DAY

Little children happy and gay
You want to eat an apple every day.
Little children glad and gay
They eat an apple every day.
—Opal Werner, 4th grade.

APPLE DAY

Little children glad and gay,
An apple will do for each glad day.
—Myrtle Halvorson, 4th grade.

APPLE DAY

Happy children glad and gay
With an apple every day.
Is it not good? Is it not gay?
To have an apple every day?

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The 6th grade attempted poem writing and these are the results:

JACK FROST
Orlene Hagglund

Jack Frost plays with you and me
Every single day.
If healthy you would want to be,
Come outside and play.

If Mother says, "Go out and play,"
And you should answer, "No,"
Jack Frost will surely punish you
And bid North Wind to blow.

SNOW-BIRD
Gertrude Nohre

I watched a little bird one day.
It came from far away.
I saw him go to build his nest,
I'm sure he did his very best
To make it snug and warm.

First he found a willow tree,
Then some hair and other things,
Soon I saw him wink at me
Then spread his wings
And fly away.

SNOW FLAKES
Eleanor Peterson

Pretty little snow flakes
From your home above,
Coming down with all your might
To cover the grass we love.

Pretty little snow flakes,
With your coats so white,
Pray tell me why your coat's so warm
And your weight so light.

SNOW FLAKES
Harriet Hanson

Pretty little snow flakes
With your coat so white,
Coming down upon our lakes
To wrap with a blanket light.

Pretty little snow flakes,
The children love you so,
And dread the little time it takes
For you to come and go.

THE SNOW BIRD
Orlene Hagglund

I saw a little snow bird
Down where the evergreens grow.
He winked and nodded several times
For me he did not know.

I saw a little snow bird,
For him I built a house.
It seemed to be so very small,
Just right to suit a mouse.

Once this little snow bird
Jumped upon a tree.
He sang so very nicely,
I'm sure he sang to me.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Thelma Kolden was absent on Wednesday.

Clayton Gunheim was sick on Monday aud Tuesday.

We have now started our 6-weeks' test.

The boys have made plans to make a slide.

High School

All the students had a Christmas vacation which was enjoyed very much and have come back with good intentions.

LeRoy Reierson came back to school again on Tuesday.

Gertrude and Myrtle Reierson and Hermia Saastad visited school on Thursday.

Viola Johnson and Cora Olson have quit school.

This week the high school students are having their semester tests.

Pointers on Feeding

Any cow likes a clean manger to eat from. The manger should be cleaned before each feeding, of all waste material, such as corn and hay stalks, chaff, etc.

In order to insure a sweet fine flavored cream, never feed before milking. Silage, rutabagas, and many ground feeds impart bad flavors to the milk and from there it is carried to the cream.

Proper feeding helps dairy profits. Address, Bulletin Dept., University Farm, St. Paul, Minnesota, for free bulletins.

Editor of the News
Holt, Minn.

Dear Sir:

Inclosed you will find a money order of $1.50 for our subscription to the NEWS for another year. We like to see the old familiar names from week to week and we assure you that the more we see of the News the better we like it.

Out here we can hardly realize that we have just passed through the Christmas and New Year holidays, as we have not the bitter Minnesota cold to remind us of the fact. We have had a few frost nights but they do not mean so much to us who have experienced colder weather. Nevertheless we have gotten to the stage where we don't like to see it get much colder.

Will close these few words with the desire to have you express, in the columns of your daper, our New Year's Greetings to our many friends of Holt and vicinity. We hope that this year may be more prosperous and more of a blessing than the year that has just departed.

Sincerely,
Ernest Raaum.

Editors Note: We wish to say that so far this winter we have enjoyed some very mild weather.

Letter of Dead Man Wins Suit

Crowd in Courtroom Gasps When Note Is Read During Trial.

Cleveland.—If a ghost had marched into Common Pleas Judge Walter McMahon's courtroom one day recently the result would have been no more electrifying than the reading of an affidavit made by David Brown, wealthy Cleveland Heights real estate man, two years before his death.

"I am the father of Rudolph and Blanche Ban. Irene Ban, wife of John Ban, is the mother of said Rudolph and Blanche Ban," the affidavit read.

"They were christened at the time of their baptism by the name of 'Ban' to avoid publicity of our relations. I made provisions for said Irene Ban in my last will and testament.

"All of which I did of my own free will and under no influence from any one."

Crowd Gasps.

The crowd in the courtroom gasped. It seemed almost uncanny that the dead man should have foreseen this very occurrence—the struggle of his sixteen nieces and nephews to upset the will leaving nearly all his $100,000 estate to Mrs. Irene Ban.

When W. H. Schwartz, white haired attorney, mounted the stand half an hour earlier and began to testify in his clear, decisive voice to the drawing up and signing of the Brown will it seemed a matter of routine.

Yes, Brown had come to him in 1924 and asked him to draw up his will. Yes, he had named Mrs. Ban and her two children. Brown had explained that Mrs. Ban had taken care of himself and his wife, who had died the previous year, and that Mrs. Ban was the mother of his two children.

"I want her to have all I've got," Schwartz said Brown told him.

"My nieces and nephews never gave me a drink of water."

Two years after the signing of the will Brown came again to his office, Schwartz testified, and asked if there were some way of "making sure Mrs. Ban would have no trouble from his nieces and nephews." The affidavit was drawn up to meet such a contingency, Schwartz said.

The signing of the will was testified to by Schwartz and Attorney William J. Klotzbach, who share office space in the Society for Savings building. The will was dated May 29, 1924. The affidavit, which was signed only by Brown and Schwartz, was dated April 7, 1926.

Mrs. Ban Not There.

Mrs. Ban was not in the courtroom during the dramatic introduction of the affidavit, which supports her previous statements that Brown was the father of her two children.

The strain of the prolonged litigation had upset her nerves. On the witness stand in the morning she broke down completely, three times attempting to leave the courtroom, but being restrained by her attorney, Louis K. Birinyi.

"I don't care any more," she choked. "Let them have everything."

The first witness for the defense was Mrs. Ban's brother, Alfred Bailey, forty-six, of 2499 East Eighty-third street, who said Brown had once threatened him with a gun when he tried to break up the affair between his sister and Brown almost twenty years ago.

Following the introduction of more testimony, the will giving the estate to Mrs. Ban was upheld by the verdict of three women and six men.

After deliberating for almost seven hours, three of the twelve jurors still doubted the validity of the will and refused to join in the verdict, which, however, required only nine of their number.

Shark Fins, Whale Tails Are Held Food

Seattle, Wash.—Salt whale tails and pickled shark's fins are Thanksgiving turkey to many folks in Japan. This week twenty tons of the former and 200 barrels of fins were shipped to the Orient on the President Pierce.

The demand for whale tails has been increasing each year and whalers at the Akutan (Alaska) station carefully remove this part and pack it for the Japanese trade. Shark fins are saved at a Puget Sound leather tannery, the deep-sea fish being taken as far north as Prince Rupert.

France Has Two Towns With One Letter Names

Paris.—The easiest towns in the world to remember are two French villages, O, in the department of Orne, and Y, in the department of the Somme. In addition there are the villages of Eu and Ry, in Normandy. Eu gets much mail intended for America, for the initials of United States, in French, Etats Unis, are E. U. and when the periods are dropped the mail goes to Eu.

AFRICAN BELIEF IN WHITE MAN'S MEDICINE PATHETIC

Natives Beg for Any Kind of Concoction Whether They Are Sick or Not.

New York.—When a native African is bitten by a snake, a root is burned and the ashes rubbed into the wound. Some of the patients live, but most of them die.

A fascinating account of the primitive use of drugs among the blacks of Africa is given by Paul Hoefler, famous explorer just returned from the Dark continent, in the American Druggist. The use of the white man's serum is eagerly greeted by the natives, who regard it as a form of magic.

In fact, civilization's medical compounds are so astonishing to the natives that, when a white man is around, they beg for any kind of medicine, no matter whether they are ill or well. It so happens that if the medicine is refused, the native is likely to brood, and begin to pine away with a purely imaginary ailment, actually dying by inches—a striking example of how the native curse is worked. The victim of the curse is told he is marked for death; it preys on his mind, and he pines away and does die.

A native, the writer says, is made perfectly happy if he is given a dose of medicine, and the more obnoxious it tastes, the better he thinks it is. A nauseating mixture of castor oil and quinine will be swallowed with every sign of bliss.

There should be a good market, in Mr. Hoefler's opinion, for cosmetics and chewing gum in Africa. Not only are the women possessed of an urge for personal beautification, but the men as well. They anoint their bodies with outlandish and evil-smelling mixtures to improve on nature and give themselves color and gloss. A favorite is a low-grade fat obtained from the bodies of cows, horses or goats and mixed with red earth, with which "cold cream" they smear themselves from head to foot. Others use fish oil or vegetable oil. The natives of southwest Africa smear their hair with a similar mixture and make an Egyptian-styled coiffure.

Astronomer Says Moon and Earth Will Crash

London.—One day in the dim and distant future the moon will crash into the earth, says Sir James Jeans, world-famous mathematician and astronomer.

We shall not be there to see, Sir James declared in a radio broadcast, but the result will be that millions of fragments will surround the globe in rings like Saturn's; it will be moonlight all night; and people will spend their time dodging tiny falling moons.

Sir James said: "In the far future our own moon must inevitably be drawn in closer and closer to the earth, until finally it comes too near for safety and must meet its fate."

THE GRAND OLD PAIR

By FANNIE HURST

(© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THEY were a grand old pair. That was how the local press eulogized them upon the celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

They deserved the appelation. Their half-century of life together had embodied all those qualities that go to solidify and enrich the human scene. Helen and Lazarus Bradstoop had builded well and tenanted their home with a family that they reared in harmony and unison. Four girls and six boys were the issue of it. All, with the exception of two sacrificed to war, grown and out of the nest.

Even the nest that had borne them had passed. With the marriage of their last child, Aileen, to a French viscount, the old couple, responding to pressure, had agreed to give up the great brown stone family home and move into the compact quarters of an apartment hotel.

It worked, too. They frankly enjoyed the new freedom from responsibility. The relief from the pressure of large household machinations. For the first time in almost half a century, Helen Lazarus found herself with time on her hands. For the first time in that period Lazarus, free of business and family burdens, felt himself at liberty to sun himself of a morning in the large park opposite the hotel.

When Helen was sixty-five and her husband seventy, they took their first trip abroad, in the company of one of their older sons and his wife.

It was a four-months' tour and as Helen proudly related when they returned, their son and daughter-in-law had literally carried them about, so solicitous were they for the well-being and comfort of the parents.

That was the attitude of the entire large family of Bradstoops. Helen and Lazarus had reached a time of life when they were entitled to the good things. The Bradstoop children, by tacit agreement, saw to it, each and severally, that their parents should come into a rich old age.

To grow old like the Bradstoops, surrounded by love, giving it, receiving it, secure in one another, and in the ministrations of the huge and devoted family, was the kind of thing the beholder unconsciously coveted for his own and for himself.

Every year when the family met at Christmas, around a table that seated forty, even a stranger looking in might have felt his heart strain as he saw; strain with a sense of the beauty of this spectacle of family well being.

And now, we come to what must reluctantly be termed the fly in the ointment. If there was one flaw in the perfect family sequence, it centered around the charming and personable figure of Aileen Bradstoop, who had married the viscount and moved to Paris.

The Bradstoops, with unanimity, had opposed that marriage of the baby of the family to Leland Le Conte, young aviator who had gravitated to St. Louis, as that city was by way of becoming an aviation center of the world.

Aileen and Le Conte met at a country club, became engaged that same evening and ten days later were married with an ado of social flurry, to say nothing of the consistent, if repressed, opposition of the Bradstoop family.

Le Conte was bona fide as to connections, all right. The third son of an ancient if decadent Alsatian family, impecunious, reckless, high-strung, but all in all, in the opinion of the Bradstoops and their friends, just the man for the correspondingly high-strung Aileen not to marry.

A word about Aileen. Born six years after the ninth child, she had been from the start, a special kind of youngster. Erratic, strangely lovely in a blond fashion that was distinctly a departure from the Bradstoop olive tints, and with blue eyes that glittered like ice in the sun.

Countless were the secret conferences held by her parents over this elusive sprite, their child. Her mother feared her a bit and where a reprimand would suffice for one of the other children, with Aileen it was always a matter of knowing just how to handle her.

The old gentleman Bradstoop, a disciplinarian after a fashion, although a kind one to the letter, shied off a bit, too, where Aileen was concerned. In the phraseology of the St. Louis of this period, people said that Aileen "had her family bluffed." They deferred to her. She was a swan in a barnyard. A special breed. An exotic in a just ordinary garden.

For instance, in a community where smoking was still a vice for a woman, Aileen at eighteen flaunted the weed, defying parental remonstrance and threatening to smoke in the public parks if the home were forbidden her.

Aileen won.

At nineteen, she openly went to the room of one of the town's well-known bachelors, entered unannounced and informed the flabbergasted conservative that she had arrived for tea.

She was not of the yielding, passive, contented breed of her sisters, was forever getting herself talked about in one boisterous capacity after another, and at one time was reported to have eloped with the family chauffeur.

So, unwelcome as the viscount marriage was, it was with some relief that the Bradstoops saw her safely enmeshed in a marriage that at least carried with it the undeniable tincture of respectability, even though young Leland was known for a certainty to be anything but conservative.

He was a young man somehow, who seemed foreordained. There was a transient quality about Leland. You expected catastrophe to overtake him, one way or another. It was in his cards. It was in his eyes.

Ten years after his marriage to Aileen it did. And of all ironic accidents! Leland, the daredevil, the ace, the aviator; Leland, who loved fast horses and fast polo, was to die in bed of blood poison from an infected toe-nail.

Six months later, there returned to America, practically penniless, Aileen and her four children, two robust boys and a pair of frail girl twins.

The quick and stormy and impetuous years had left their mark on Aileen. Leland had broken her, as the saying goes. Her spirit lay a dead thing within her. Gone was the ice-glitter from her eyes, and the shoulders that had always defied, were tamed somehow. It was a different Aileen who came home. A rather heart-hurting edition of her former self.

Leland had fulfilled the Bradstoop prophecies. Gradually it was all to come out. Not so much from what Aileen was ever to say. But piece by piece, the whole sordid story was unconsciously to reproduce itself before her family.

Leland had been a rotter, both as a husband and a father. His children had lived in terror of him. That was what had broken Aileen. Leland had once struck his little four-year-old twins in a drunken fury. There had been a scar along one small arm for months. His sons had cringed from him. These small children had come to know terror early.

The pain of that was graven into the face and heart of Aileen.

And Aileen brought home with her one desire; indeed it might be said that Aileen brought home with her one obsession. She wanted for these pallid children of hers the kind of youth she had known in the old brown family mansion of her childhood. She not only wanted for them that kind of youth, but the identical setting. She wanted the old house on Pine street which her parents had long since sold to a Catholic school and which was now used as the dwelling place of twelve monks who conducted the institution.

At first the idea seemed too fantastic even to bear discussion. The brothers and sisters of Aileen rose in a unanimous mass against the idea of the parents ever being asked to resume any of the duties of home and household.

It must also be said that Helen and Lazarus themselves, who were contemplating a long-dreamed trip to the Orient, drew away from the prospect.

In a way, Aileen bowed her head before the selfishness of her demands and the unanimity of the decision against her. She took up her residence, at the willing bounty of her family, in the same hotel with her parents. There her children, strange youngsters reared in the French tradition, sought to adapt themselves to new environment.

There, Aileen, so sobered that there was pathos in her very aspect, sought to cause to shine upon these starveling offspring of hers, some of the radiance of the kind of children that had been hers.

In a way she succeeded. Even in the hotel environment Helen and Lazarus were to fill a niche in the lives of their grandchildren that was vital and important.

They lived in closest proximity, the grandparents part of the very fabric of each. And yet there came a time when Helen realized that there was to be no trip to the Orient, no continuance of the carefree life that contained no household worries, no problems of upkeep.

Aileen's children needed a home.

Each and every one of the brothers and sisters rallied around to combat the determination, even Aileen herself protesting as she contemplated the worn, lined faces of her parents.

But in the end it was the determination of Helen, finally aided and abetted by Lazarus, that won the day.

At no small difficulty the Bradstoops succeeded in buying the brown old home on Pine street back from the Monks, who surrendered it reluctantly, but succumbed to the pressure brought to bear.

The Bradstoop home is going again full blast. Tradespeople hurry in and out during its busy days, general housecleaning comes and goes, and the children of Aileen race in and out, to school, from school, on roller skates, on roller coasters.

The grandparents are as hard put as they ever were in their lives. The house is filled with the hurry of feet, the demands of small voices, the cries of childish altercation.

Helen is beside herself with duties; Lazarus full of mild scolding ways and admonitions to grandchildren.

There is no time for travel.

Aileen has finally succeeded in bringing home to her brothers and sisters the fact that, with all their trials, the years have fallen away from her parents in a fashion that is amazing.

Secretly Aileen blesses her capacity for always managing to get her way.

INDIGESTION GOES—QUICKLY, PLEASANTLY

When you suffer from heartburn, gas or indigestion, it's usually too much acid in your stomach. The quickest way to stop your trouble is with Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. A spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids—instantly. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

Try Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, and you will never allow yourself to suffer from over-acidity again. It is the standard anti-acid with doctors.

Your drugstore has Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, with directions for use, in generous 25c and 50c bottles.

Amazes Mother

"Bobbie's stomach was often upset and he suffered a lot from colds," says Mrs. P. S. Fletcher, Jr., 4410 W. 30th St., Los Angeles, Cal. "We found he was constipated.

"Mother used California Fig Syrup, so we gave Bobbie some. He amazed me by the quick way he became strong, energetic, well again. His bowels act freely now, and his digestion is splendid."

The quick, safe way to cleanse and regulate the bowels of bilious, headachy, constipated children is with California Fig Syrup. Every child loves it. It has the full endorsement of doctors. Appetite is increased by its use; digestion is assisted; weak stomach and bowels are given tone and strength.

LAXATIVE-TONIC for CHILDREN

Make All Preparations

Be sure you're right and that the traffic cop is good natured, and that your insurance is paid up, and that you have at least an even chance of beating the truck on your left, and that the light is green, and then go ahead.—Judge.

An Eminent Physician Prescribed this Tonic

AS a young man Dr. R. V. Pierce practiced medicine in Pennsylvania. His prescriptions met with such great demand that he moved to Buffalo, N.Y. and put up in ready-to-use form his well-known tonic for the blood, Golden Medical Discovery. It aids digestion, acts as a tonic, and enriches the blood—clears away pimples and annoying eruptions and tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear. This medicine comes in both fluid and tablets. Salmon Strong in Vitamins

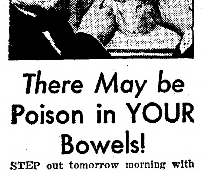
The vitamin potency of salmon, tuna and pilchard has been found very high.

There's a Limit

Optimist—Well, the depression can't last forever.

Business Man—No, neither can I.



There May be Poison in YOUR Bowels!

STEP out tomorrow morning with the fresh buoyancy and briskness that comes from a clean intestinal tract. Syrup Pepsin—a doctor's prescription for the bowels—will help you do this. This compound of fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other pure ingredients will clean you out thoroughly—without griping, sickening or discomfort.

Poisons absorbed into the system form souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied bowel troubles for forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drug stores sell.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expressed fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Mrs. Krassin conducts Vilinsky in an inspection of the home and contrives that he shall not see Ilya. The commissar brutally insults Musia. Mrs. Krassin's thoughts are all of Ilya. Musia feels herself defenseless and wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women." To Vladimir, Musia criticizes her brother Ilya's acceptance of the situation.

"What a sacrilege!" said Vladimir, touching her lightly with his hand. "As well wish this lovely vase a kettle!"

"Don't!" she cried in protest at the light tone—after that dreadful night of hers, of which poor Vladimir knew nothing. "Oh, when will this Bolshevik pollution be wiped out! They contaminate the very air! I wish I were a man! How long will it last? When shall we be fighting here?"

He opened his mouth to answer, and then paused; paused as he thought that it was not wise to discuss their prospects of success in the near future with anyone who was not entitled to know all—not even with this dear girl. But his sweet and tender impulse toward her had not quite passed away, her attitude intrigued him, it was so new; and he felt a natural and very powerful impulse to talk with some one—especially with her—of what had been of late so uppermost in his mind. For a moment he felt that he might venture something.

"Their end and our triumph is very near," he said in a low voice. "Of that I feel sure."

"But," said she as if to elicit more, "our side is so badly organized—our plans are so new. We always thought they would break down of themselves—this awful tyranny, you know."

"Yes," said he non-committally, "I know."

"What makes you think that success this time—"

She paused, her eyes fixed on his. Suddenly the feeling came over him that he was paltering with the letter if not the spirit of the faith plighted to the conspiracy, through that oldest of temptations, a woman's charms. No, it was no time for such stuff as this!

"I am afraid," said he, "that I cannot satisfy your mind on that question."

She felt as if he had intended to say, "your curiosity." She felt rebuked—unjustly rebuked—for was she not as much a Russian noble as he? And had she not suffered more than he? Was she not in a danger to which he was immune? But of course, he knew nothing of that.

The tender passage was over—for this day at least—and who knew of future days? A moment ago he had looked at her in a way that made her blush. It was the old conflict between the lady's chamber and the tented field.

She told him with a few discordant notes on the piano that he had hurt her; and when he sought to revert to their old vein of badinage, she did not reply.

"Let me play you this Greig etude," said she. "Listen to the dute in it—isn't it queer? Do you like it?"

This she said with her back to him, her fingers on the keys. At the end of the piece she sat with her hands by her side, and for a long time Vladimir said nothing.

"It is very beautiful," said he, bowing over her hand as he parted from her. "I shall see you again soon. Adieu!"

The acid of the revolution was bringing romances like theirs everywhere into nothingness, dissolution. When conspiracy came in at the window, love walked out at the door.

CHAPTER VII

In Rama Was There a Voice Heard

Vladimir left the House of Krassin as he came in—by the back door, and went to the little wicket gate on the rear street. He was in a worn uniform, that of a common soldier.

The time had come to bring his dawdling to an end, to take his plunge; to assume his supreme duty; to yield to the exigent necessity of the hour—resistance to the Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

As he reached the wall, he turned before opening the gate and looked back at the great old house on its hill overlooking Kazan and fronting on its principal street. Though it looked so homelike, with its few lights shining out toward him between the boles of the tall trees, he felt rather light-hearted. He could no longer be thrown into the temptation to compromise conspiracy with love in his frequent meetings with Musia; and he would no longer feel when with Mrs. Krassin that one moment he was condemned by her for his neglect of his duty to Musia, and the next that she almost hated him for taking the bold course which might bring Ilya into danger.

He had decided to go without bidding either of them good-by—for several reasons. He knew that they would understand, and that he would not be expected to mention his plans to them; he would be spared any farewell to Musia—a farewell for which he longed, but one which he feared would be too much for his self-control. And then in slipping away thus, he should avoid any display of the contrast between his course and Ilya's, either before Musia, who was his partisan, or her mother who stood with Ilya.

And then it was the dark of the moon, for which he had been waiting. He would travel by night and hide by day, disguised in his soldier's uniform.

It Was as If a Trap Had Been Set for Him.

His was the temperament of the happy warrior; he knew that Musia would understand and approve—and his heart rose as he opened the little wicket into the back street.

He stood with his hand on the hasp of the gate and looked back again, at the big house, lichened and scaly with age, with all its treasures of tapestries, books, sculpture, rugs, antiques, musical instruments, and its great store of provisions. He felt a twinge of guilt at leaving Musia undefended in it. He thought even of the old judge, who knew nothing of the revolution, but whom it must reach at last—unless the forces which Vladimir was about to join could bring rescue in time. Vladimir was the last of the men to depart; for he never included Ilya in his list of men. But what could he alone do, even if he stayed? There was no other course—he must take the plunge, and trust to fortune that he might return to Musia in time.

He opened the gate and stepped out.

He stepped out into the midst of a detail of Bolshevist soldiers! It was as if a trap had been set for him.

The spring of the door had swung it to behind him, and the spring lock held it fast. He was locked out—with his back to the wall. The hand which went to the holster was pinioned to his side; but he turned the muzzle up and shot from the hip. One dark form staggered and toppled over. There was a short sharp fight with fist and foot, in which numbers prevailed; and Vladimir was hustled off, disarmed and bleeding, toward the krepost by the soldiers.

"Tovarisch," said the man in command to one of his soldiers, "go to the front and tell the commander that we have got one of them—and that he got one of us!"

To an "Amiable Child"

There is a monument near Grant's tomb in New York, the inscription on which reads: "Erected to the memory of an amiable child, St. Clair Pollock, died July 15, 1797, in the fifth year of his age. Man that is born of woman is of few years, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down. He fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not." The child was the nephew of George Pollock, a New York merchant who at one time owned Claremont. In this conveyance of the property in 1800 he stated: "There is a small inclosure near your boundary fence within which lies the remains of a favorite child, covered by a marble monument. You will convey a peculiar and interesting favor upon me by allowing me to convey . . keeping it, however, always enclosed and sacred. There is a white marble funeral urn prepared to place on the monument which will not lessen its beauty."

Discouraged

Martha Anne, a first grade pupil, came home from school a little tired and vexed. Things had not gone to suit her, for this is what she told her mother:

"Well, if I had my life to live over, I certainly wouldn't go to school."

YOUTH RISKS LIFE TO RESCUE CHILD

Member of School Patrol to Get Medal for Act.

Washington.—The name of Colbert Yates, fourteen, was written on the honor roll of schoolboy patrol heroes who have saved the lives of classmates.

Colbert darted into the path of an automobile and dragged Emily May, six, to safety.

The act of bravery was called to the attention of teachers at the Barnard school, where Colbert and Emily are students, by Mrs. O. J. Kluh.

Mrs. Kluh, who was accompanying her children to school, said the boy patrolmen were holding a group of children on the curb until the intersection was clear. Emily, Mrs. Kluh said, darted around the waiting children and into the path of the automobile.

Instantly, Mrs. Kluh reported, Colbert sped from his post, snatched up the child and ran to safety.

A second later the automobile sped over the spot where Emily had been standing.

Colbert will receive a merit medal from the American Automobile association as a reward for his bravery.

New Motor Car Robbery Racket Is Discovered

Washington.—There is a new racket under the sun, devised for the special benefit of motor car thieves.

As attempted unsuccessfully recently, it works this way: The racketeer spots a parked automobile with suitable lure, notes the tag numbers and general description and telephones a garage of towing service, explaining that the keys to the door and the ignition switch are lost.

"Please tow the car to your garage and fit new keys to it, and I will call for it later," the garage is advised.

To work out properly for the thief the garage then must complete its work without further inquiry and turn the car over to its "owner" when he calls for it as per agreement.

But it didn't work out that way this last time, thanks to the alertness and curiosity of a bellboy at the Harrington hotel.

When the boy saw a garage truck towing away from in front of the hotel a sedan belonging to a guest he notified the hotel manager and the latter notified the guest, who got his car at a garage.

Robert Asks Police to Find Thelma and His $70

Washington.—Robert Scott, who had $70 in his pocket one afternoon recently, was able to tell police this much about Thelma:

She was pretty, about twenty-three, a brunette.

She was the girl who invited him to visit a place near Eleventh and "I" streets.

The same girl, in fact, who suggested a few drinks, which they had.

But what Scott did not know and what he wanted to know of the police was:

Who is Thelma?

Where is Thelma?

With the answers to those two questions, Scott said, he could answer a third and more pressing one for himself:

What became of the $70?

Theft Fails to Get Man Back in Atlanta Prison

Jacksonville, Fla.—R. Allen stole 50 2-cent envelopes, took them to M. R. Morgan, postal inspector, and demanded he be sent to Atlanta penitentiary.

"I served one term in Atlanta penitentiary and I liked it there. I stole the envelopes in order to get my old job back. When do I start?" he demanded.

But United States Commissioner Carl Noble said the offense wasn't serious enough. Allen was acquitted.

Farmer Loses His Life Savings by Old Trick

Plattekill, N. Y.—Theodore Barbatsuly, a farmer, was swindled out of his life's savings, $2,082, by three men he met on the street, he told police.

The men persuaded him to draw the money from a bank as security in a "deal" and in some manner switched wallets.

The victim was left with one containing nothing but a few one dollar bills and wads of newspaper.

Can't PLAY
Can't REST
—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

4-H Club To Meet

As announced in last week's issue. Mr. A. Pflughoeft from Crookston, will be at the Holt High School auditorium at 1:45 p. m. on Tuesday, Jan. 20, to ossist in re-organizing the Holt 4-H club. The club has had a fine record in the past and with the new organization should become one of the leading clubs in Northwestern Minnesota.

Three prominent local farmers and one prominent local lady have agreed to act as leaders in the various divisions of the club and our forty members have definitely signified their intention of enrolling.

John Augustine, prominent local dairyman and Holtstein breeder, will conduct the dairy calf club. John Benitt, well known beef cattle breeder, will have charge of the beef calf club and William Paskewitz, a leading sheep raiser the sheep club. Mrs. Geo. Fricker will direct the girls activities.

A good program has been arranged for Tuesday afternoon and there should be a large attendance. You may be to old to join the club, but you can't be too old to be interested. The teachers in the rural schools are asked to see that their students are informed of the meeting and to urge them to attend. Speakers on the program Tuesday afternoon besides Mr. Pflughoeft will be H. P. Wahlin, manager of the local creamery, Ben Thompson, Doris Leiran, and Supt. R. B. Perry. Give it a large attendance.

Dr. L. R. Twete, veterenarian of Thief River Falls made several professional calls here last week.

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, January 23, 1931. Volume 20; Number 39.

New County Board Meets

Ole Bergman, Alvarado, commissioner from the second district, was elected as chairman of the Marshall county board of commissioners at the annual meeting of the county board held at Warren on January 6. A. N. Lodoen, commissioner from the first district of Warren, was chosen as vice-chairman.

The greater part of the first day's session was devoted to the swearing in and approving bonds of officers who were elected at the November election last fall, all officers now having full charge of their new duties.

Two new members appear on the roster of the board of county commissioners as a result of the election, the new men coming from districts where incmbents sought voluntary retirement. J. J. Pagnac, Stephen farmer, is the new commissioner of the 3rd district succeeding Ole Torgerson and Otto Johnson of Grygla, is the new commissioner of the fifth district, succeeding A. C. McMillin of Gatzke.

New members of the court house official family sworn into office at this meeting include Levi Johnson as county auditor and Peter Kvikstad as county treasurer.

A good deal of time was also devoted to a hearing regarding the re-establishment of county agent extension service in the county. A large number of people from all sections of the county appeared before the new board which held their hearing in the court room. Good arguments were advanced for and against the proposition. Because of the stringent financial conditions of the county at the present time the board adopted a resolution denying the request.

C. L. McNelly, assistant county agent leader in Minnesota was present at the hearing and submitted an attractive proposition for Marshall county whereby the major part of the cost would be borne by the state and federal governments. This proposition is made annually to help get the work started in some county of the state. G. A. Sustad of Viking presented the local case in good shape and good arguments whyMarshall county should have the service of an agent.

Strong arguments were voiced against the re-establishment of the extension service by Malm of Big Woods and E. Evans of Middle River and several other citizens, the principal argument advanced being that it was unnecessary and did not warrant the expenditure of money at the present time.

The Warren Sheaf was again designated as the official newspaper of Marshall county for 1931. All legal publications of the county including financial statement, delinquint tax lists, official proceedings and all other official matters will be published in the Sheaf. Arrangements have also been made to circulte the financial statement, delinquint tax list and official proceedings of the annual and semi-annual meeting of the county. in all the other newspaper in the county. The newspapers include The Marshall County Banner, Argyle; Stephen Messenger, Stephen; The Red River Valley Times, Oslo; Middle River Record; Strandquist Press; Holt Weekly News; Grygla Eagle and Newfolden Review.

Automobile Tag Missing?

Due to the activities of the Minnesota Highway Patrol, there are probably fewer cars with one plate missing this year than is ordinarily the case. Nevertheless, we see one or more such cars every day.

Instead of paying $2.00 for duplicate plates, as motorists are required to do if they lose a license plate at other times of the year, all the car owner with one 1930 plate has to do now is to get his 1931 plates at the regular price. But he should get these new plates immediatelly, says a Highway bulletin. If you continue driving with one plate, you are are inviting a ticket from a traffic officer.

Car owners who make application for plates now will get them without delay. Those who wait until the rush period near Feb. 15, the final date for payment of the tax without penalty. may have to wait several weeks before they get their new tags.

Car owners are urged to fasten their plates securely. This will prevent their being lost, and will discourage theft. It will save the cost of duplicate plates, as well as the embarrassment of getting a ticket for driving with but one plate.

Pointers on Feeding

Feeds may be classed in three divisions; i. e., roughage, succulence, and concentrates.

Roughage includes all kinds of hay and fodder.

Succulent feeds are the green feeds, such as silage, roots, etc.

Concentrates include all the ground feeds, grains, minerals, etc.

A proper mixture of these feeds will insure steady profits to the dairyman who takes the trouble to watch his cows and their feed.

30,000 Deer Slain Last Season

Approximately 30,000 deer were shot during the recent open season in Minnesota, according to an estimate made by Robert B. Forest, deputy state and game fish commissioner. He expressed the opinion that about 100,000 deer were in Minnesota forests at the beginning of the hunting season, and that about a third of them were slaughtered. During the 1928 season 27,335 deer were killed and that year 56,554 hunting licenses were issued. For the 1930 season 62,000 permits were issued, netting the state $140,000.

Grain Prices in Canada

James Monroe, Saskatchewan farmer, shipped a carload of barley and a can of cream to market the same day. After paying the freight charges on the barley he received 49 cents more for his can of cream than for the entire carload of barley. The day he sold barley was selling for six cents per bushel.

County Board Economizes

The Economy Bug bit the members of the county board at their annual meeting with the results that salaries of several Marshall county court house officials will be reduced in the aggregate of $1,240 per year. The salary cuts were made by the board in response to insistent demands for an economical administration of county afiairs during the coming yenr. and are in line with other economy measures as outlined by the board for 1931.

Five officials were included in the wage cutting process. W. O. Braggans, county attorney, is cut from $2500 to $2250 a year; Probate Judge Brett, from $2500 to $2300; Irving E. Quist, highway engineer, was cut but $240 from $2400 to $2160. while his assistant was cut $300 from $1800 to $1500 per year. The final cut was in the office of assistant superintendent of schools where a $300 cut reduced the salary from $1500 to $1200.

Tax Rate for Holt Rises

1931 taxes in the Village of Holt will be paid on a basis of 195.5 mills an increase of 11.15 mills over the 1929 rate, as certified by County Auditor Levi G. Johnson in a compilation of taxes for the county made public last week. To make up the 195.5 mills total, we have the school district rate of 113.9 mills, the village rate of 57.7 mills, the state rate of 5.7 and the county rate of 17.75 mills.

The village of Holt has the hishest tax rate in the county for the present year, with Middle River village ranking second with a total rate of 183.35 mills.

Editor Note: One taxpayer asked us the other day why there Was such a big boost in the tax rate and, we, to be frank with him, told him that this tax rate had a long time ago ceased being a just figure of what you should pay and was now spoken of as a sort of fine that you must pay for owning property and doing business here.

They are soaking you 19 and a half cents on the dollar now. Yet they are easy going as that is only a fifth of your property. Next will be— Confiscation.

Mud Lake Rambles

A group of young folks shivareed Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Leas on Sunday evening.

Mrs. L. Sagstuen has been on the sick list the past week.

Mary Moberg of Gatzke has been visiting with her sister, Mrs. J. S. Leiran, in Thief River Falls the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Leiran and daughter of Thief River Falls were short callers at the L. Sagstuen home Sunday.

Petra Johnson has been employed at the John Moberg home at Gatzke the past two weeks.

Seal Sales Gain

Holt is on the list of Minnesota towns making an increase in this year's Christmas Seal sale, according to a report made this week by the Minnesota Public Health Association. The recent sale totaled $13.55 as compared to the returns of $10.28 for 1929. Much credit for this excellent record goes to R. B. Perry, who directed the campaign locally, and to the local people who assisted and contributed generously.

The year's anti-tuberculosis and health educational program to be financed by the Christmas Seals in the county will be planned by local officers with the cooperation of the Minnesota Public Health Association.

"Special credit is due towns making an increase in this year's sale because of the period depression," Dr. E. A. Meyerding, executive secretary of the Minnesota Public Health Association states. He points out that because so many towns made special effort it will be possible to continue the anti-tuberculosis work in the state without curtailment during the coming year.

Love Tangle in Murder of Four

Flirtation Note Is Clew in Mystery That Puzzles Authorities.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—The theory that a love tangle of some sort was responsible for the Germond murders recently when a country family of four were butchered with a kitchen knife by an unidentified assailant for an unknown reason, has been further emphasized by the finding of what properly may be termed a love note by the side of the road passing the Germond farm.

The note, written on a narrow strip of paper, reads as follows:

"Don't you remember me? Could I come over and sit by you? Would you care?"

The tentative presumption is that the note was handed to Bernice Germond, the good looking eighteen-year-old daughter of the murdered household, while she was riding in the bus which brought her home from Poughkeepsie shortly before she must have gone to her death along with her parents and ten-year-old brother Raymond.

Driver Recalls Man Leaving.

The note was written in an unsteady fashion, which may or may not indicate that it was composed in the bus. It was found folded, but not crumpled, in the ditch by the roadside 200 yards beyond the point where the bus driver stopped to let Bernice out. Dennis Haggerty, driver of the bus, said that he recalled a dark skinned man who got off the bus a short distance before it stopped at the Germond farmhouse.

Sheriff Vernard J. Rockefeller and state troopers, while considering the possibility that the note was placed on the road by an excitement seeker after the murder, do not think anyone would be foolish enough to do this in the face of the aroused feeling among the farmers, and are therefore inclined to take it at its face value.

The massacre of the family as they were busied with the nightly chores is the closest thing to an Edgar Allen Poe mystery that Dutchess county has ever experienced, and every effort is being made to solve it. The citizens in the drug stores and other places talk of nothing else, and farmers have taken to carrying shotguns with them.

The family was extremely well thought of in the community and was well-connected. Ralph Butts, a former mayor of Poughkeepsie and a cousin of Mrs. Germond, said he did not know of any sort of quarrel Germond had ever had which could in and way account for the murders. Paul Germond, brother of the murdered farmer and owner of a prosperous farm a mile down the road, agreed emphatically with Butts, as have all his neighbors.

The question arose when the clerk in the Dubois hardware store in Poughkeepsie who sold the kitchen knife with which the murders were undoubtedly committed, and which was found beside the house covered with human blood, told state police that the man who bought it was not a foreigner, but an American.

Say Girl Was "Boy Crazy."

The clerk's size-up of the purchaser is strengthened by the fact that he bought a pig scraper at the same time, an instrument with which the average city dweller would not be familiar. When the purchaser bought the pig-scraper the clerk tried to sell him a regular pigsticking knife, but the man refused it in an impatient fashion, and insisted upon buying the longer bladed weapon which was found on the farm.

The more that comes to light regarding the case, the more the authorities believe that Bernice was of the type commonly described as "boy crazy," and the more they pin their hope of solving the crime upon the unearthing of a definite affair between her and a particular man.

Every trail police dig up runs into some sort of blank wall. A Cuban, who was noticed by a storekeeper in whose store he hired an auto, was rather neatly dressed, whereas, it appears practically impossible that the killer could have dispatched four people putting up a struggle without becoming covered with blood.

Neighbor Theory Called Absurd.

This point again leads back to the theory that the crime was committed by some neighbor who disposed of his bloody garments in the security of his home. And that the country people will tell you, is absurd.

Mildred Hyde, cousin of Bernice, who lives at Red Hook, some miles away, and who was her confidante in matters of the heart, was interviewed and seemed unable to throw any light on the identity of the man in the case.

Undersheriff Fred Close, in active charge of the case, continues to believe there is such a man. He thinks the only person who would have gone to the trouble of murdering all four people, including the ten-year-old boy, would be some one known to the family, who was afraid to leave behind any living witness to the original murder.

Once Held for Murder, Beauty Now Evangelist

Bridgeport, Conn.—Helga Fagerskold, once a noted beauty and central figure in a sensational Swedish murder trial, has pledged her remaining years to evangelism after twice being rescued from alms houses.

The woman, who once was engaged to marry a member of the Swedish nobility, has just been released from Hillside home after serving 11 months for theft. She is broken in health and fortune. She was induced to devote herself to evangelism by Rev. Lewis J. Long during her incarceration. After her release she was taken to the home of Mrs. Richard Thorne Tjader of Darien, wife of the famous explorer, who rescued her from a house of correction in New York several years ago.

Miss Fagerskold sought oblivion here after her acquittal on a charge of murdering the father of her noble fiance in Sweden. She took the name of Helga White and the true story of her identity was not revealed until she was arrested for theft of jewels from a Westport home in which she was a maid about a year ago.

Canadian Farmer Goes Outside to Keep Warm

Barrie, Ont.—In below-zero weather, Jerry Harrigan, Brechin farmer, goes out into the field to get warm. Out of his cozy log cabin home, out into the bare wind-swept bleakness of his snow-covered fields, he goes, rubs his hands, takes off his coat, lights his pipe, and enjoys it, for the field is on fire.

It has been for a week. It will be until spring, smoking merrily, melting away and drying up the snow. Hundreds of square feet of it are making such heat and can be plainly felt by passing automobiles, and smelled a half mile away.

It is not wood that is burning, nor coal, nor hay, nor straw—it is the earth of the field itself, the dirt that is yearly ploughed that has taken fire and in turn has fired fence posts and gates.

Pencils and Pens Cause of Arrest

Seattle.—Undoubtedly a waiter has need of pens and pencils to reckon the bill, but even for the remarkable mathematics the gentlemen of the white coat compute, they have no need of five pens and three expensive pencils.

This was the reasoning of Patrolman B. A. Sands, so he arrested Jule Gorham, a waiter, at First avenue and Main street, when he found him in possession of that much writing equipment. Gorham was held on an open charge.

VICTIM TELLS OF HOURS IN ICY SEA

Has Desperate Battle With Tide for 31 Hours.

Seattle.—Lashed to his frail sail skiff, which overturned in a sudden squall, Sam G. Ward, Jr., drifted in the icy waters of Puget sound for 31 harrowing hours, to come ashore cold and exhausted, but ready for more of life's adventures.

Semi-conscious, the twenty-three-year-old bus driver was found still lashed to the craft by J. E. Harrison, bank teller, in front of his home facing the beach.

At the City hospital Ward remonstrated with his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Ward of Bellingham, who had come, distraught, when the young man was reported missing, and said that "it is nothing—I'm going to get up."

"I left my place at Three Tree Point about ten o'clock in the evening," he said. "It was a beautiful, moonlight night and I sailed toward Vashon island shore.

"About mid-channel a stay gave way and I stood up to fix it when two unexpectedly large waves struck and I was thrown into the water."

"The tides were too strong for me and the shore too far away to swim because I was weak trying to right the boat. When I found myself getting exhausted I lashed myself to the boat.

"Boats passed me all through the day but too far away. One, I think it was the Northwestern, came close, but they didn't see me," young Ward said.

Scoffing Parrot Better Than a Squealing One

Akron, Ohio.—"Papa" John's love for pets, particularly parrots, is on the wane these days.

"Papa's" first parrot met an untimely death last winter while officers were searching for beer. The officers failed to find the beer they suspected John of making. Finally one of the officers turned to Polly, the pet.

"Where's the beer, Polly?" the vice squad member asked.

"Under the platform, under the platform," parroted Polly.

Six months later the officers returned in quest of intoxicants. This time they found them without the aid of Polly's successor. They put John under arrest.

"Ha ha, ha," laughed Polly the second.

At any rate, said "Papa" John, a scoffing parrot is better than a squealing one.

Magistrate Flogs and Burns Gypsy Girl, 17

Berlin.—A case of lynch justice is reported by the Berliner Tageblatt from Prossburg, in Czechoslovakia.

A village in the neighborhood had been greatly annoyed by repeated thefts by Gypsies, and when a Gypsy girl, seventeen years of age, was caught in the act, the village magistrate took the punishment into his own hands.

He flogged the girl in her mother's presence with a long, thick whip until she lost consciousness. He then tied the girl, from whose body blood was streaming, to the branch of a tree and set fire to a heap of brushwood underneath it.

Eeats Up His Wife, Thinking Her Bandit

Detroit.—Mrs. Lucille Cott, twenty, and jealous, set out to follow her husband and protect him from the wiles of other women.

For the purpose she dressed in masculine clothes.

Her husband, Larney, twenty-six, discovered the stranger shadowing him, waylaid "him" at a dark corner and laid "him" low with a well-directed kick.

Police took Mrs. Cott to a hospital and started looking for her husband.

Sawdust Dummy Is Used in Holdups on Highway

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Officers investigating complaints of holdup attempts on the highway near Ringgold, Ga., found a dummy man stuffed with sawdust attached to a rope so he would appear in front of the cars as they approached.

Boys were seen running into a woods as the officers approached, Sheriff E. F. Land said.

FRENCH MYSTERY PLANES TO SEEK WORLD RECORDS

Two Models Under Construction Are Designed for Long-Distance Flights.

Paris.—France's welcome to Dieudonne Costes and Maurice Bellonte barely had died away when technicians in French airplane factories turned back to the construction of superplanes which the French ministry of air believes will make France complete master of the air for 1931.

Two planes already are under construction, one of them destined for Costes and the other probably for Joseph Le Brix. They are designed on paper to carry a pair of airmen nearly half way around the world. France expects to carry the world's distance record, which Costes already won for her, to well beyond 10,000 kilometers with these planes.

The ministry of air has ordered these distance planes to be monomotor instead of fitted with several motors. One motor consumes much less fuel and the air ministry has decided to sacrifice safety factors for fuel.

The planes are being built in secrecy and, in fact, were conceived in secrecy. Each will cost 2,000,000 francs. No other plane built up to now can hope to link Paris with Tokyo in one flight, and that is what France expects of these ships.

One of the planes is being built in the Breguet plant, to be fitted with a Hispano motor. The other is nearing completion in the Bleriot factories and even may be ready for exhibition at the next aviation salon.

The ministry of air does not believe either of the great planes will be ready for actual record attempting flight before midsummer of 1931. But by August, one or the other will be off from Paris for a nonstop flight, either to Brazil and the Argentine.

At the same time the ministry has ordered a series of seaplanes for South Atlantic flights, and ordered what was hoped would prove to be the fastest seaplane afloat for entering in the Schneider cup race. Engineers have run into trouble, and this order has never been fulfilled.

Secret Study of Onion Gives Man Weather Dope

Marshfield, Wis.—The concentric layers of an ordinary onion, separated and minutely examined during the last half hour of the old year and the first half hour of the new year, provide Ewald Benesch with weather prognostications that have contributed toward his reputation as a weather oracle here.

Each New Year's eve Benesch takes his onion and spends an hour in secret study in the basement of his home. He returns with a weather forecast for the entire new year.

Benesch was so accurate in his predictions for 1930 that his pronouncements for 1931 will be taken by many without reservations.

Old Battle Flags Mended

Restoring old battle flags to a semblance of their former beauty is a new vocation recently taken up by Mrs. M. Antrobus of London. Eight tattered flags which had been through many engagements, some being a mass of fragments with none of the original colors, were put in such condition that they looked like new from a short distance. The flags were encased in hand-woven nets and the original design repainted in the net.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

How One Woman Lost 20 Pounds of Fat

Lost Her Double Chin
Lost Her Prominent Hips
Lost Her Sluggishness
Gained Physical Vigor
Gained in Vivaciousness
Gained a Shapely Figure

If you're fat—remove the cause! KRUSCHEN SALTS contain the 6 mineral salts your body organs, glands and nerves should have to function properly.

When your vital organs fail to perform their work correctly—your bowels and kidneys can't throw off that waste material—before you realize it—you're growing hideously fat.

Take half a teaspoonful of KRUSCHEN SALTS in a glass of hot water every morning—cut out pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—in 3 weeks get on the scales and note how many pounds of fat have vanished.

Notice also that you have gained in energy—your skin is clearer—your eyes sparkle with glorious health—you feel younger in body—keener in mind. KRUSCHEN will give any fat person a joyous surprise.

Get an 85c bottle of KRUSCHEN SALTS (lasts 4 weeks). If this first bottle doesn't convince you this is the easiest, safest and surest way to lose fat—if you don't feel a superb improvement in health—so gloriously energetic—vigorously alive—your money gladly returned.—Adv.

PRESCRIPTION in use over 47 Years Really Helps Bowels

Don't you want this way of making the bowels behave? A doctor's way to make the bowels move so well that you feel better all over! Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin doesn't turn everything to water, but cleans out all that hard waste clogging your system. It cleans you out without any shock, for it's only fresh laxative herbs a famous doctor found so good for the bowels, combined with pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

A doctor should know what is best for the bowels. Let Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin show you how soon you can train the bowels to move freely, every day, the way they should. It's wonderful the way this prescription works, but it's perfectly harmless; so you can use it whenever a coated tongue or sick headache tells you that you're bilious. Fine for children, too (it tastes so nice) and they ought to have a spoonful the minute they seem fretful, feverish, or sluggish, or have a sallow look.

You can get the original prescription Dr. Caldwell wrote so many years ago; your druggist keeps it all ready in big bottles. Just ask for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and use it always for constipation.

WOMEN SHOULD LEARN USES OF MAGNESIA

To women who suffer from nausea, or so-called "morning sickness," this is a blessing. Most nurses know it. It is advised by leading specialists: Over a small quantity of finely cracked ice pour a teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Sip slowly until you are relieved. It ends sick stomach or inclination to vomit.

Its anti-acid properties make Phillips' Milk of Magnesia quick relief in heartburn, sour stomach, gas. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement. Used as a mouthwash it helps prevent tooth decay during expectancy.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expressed fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Mrs. Krassin conducts Vilinsky in an inspection of the home and contrives that he shall not see Ilya. The commissar brutally insults Musia. Mrs. Krassin's thoughts are all of Ilya. Musia feels herself defenseless and wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women." To Vladimir, Musia criticizes her brother Ilya's acceptance of the situation. She knows Vladimir is a member of an organization working for the downfall of the Bolsheviki. Vladimir kills a Bolsheviki soldier and is arrested.

The watchman at the front was very sleepy. It was dark as pitch. The city was very silent. Drowsiness overcame him, and he slept. He sprang to his feet as all of a sudden there came a deafening clamor of the bell, as the air was filled with the shuffling and trampling of feet, and low words of command passed from man to man. Men seemed to spring up out of the ground. The dark shadows in the old garden became invaders with bayoneted guns in their hands, standing like pointed silhouettes all about among the trees, at the rear, in front, all about—and a huge motor truck thundered up with a sound which seemed to shake the air as its weight shook the ground, until it stopped and stood in front of the street door. The bell continued its peremptory clamor. A sleepy frightened maid finally answered, in a trembling voice that was heard between rings emanating from behind the door.

"What is the matter?"

"Open! At once!"

"What do you want? Who are you?"

"In the name of the People of the Revolution," was the stern command, "I command you to open!"

Silence. Some sailors began battering at the door. Finally it was half opened, and the face of a frightened, half-dressed manservant peered out. The Bolsheviki brushed him aside, entered, and found themselves in the great reception hall, where a sudden change seemed to come over them. Intimidated or abashed by the unsuspected grandeur of the room, they huddled in the center of the hall, looked around with guilty and unfriendly eyes, and half gave back as if to retreat to the outer air.

"Are you afraid of these boorjoy?" sneered their sailor leader. "You ought to've been with me in Petersburg. Come on!"

Courage came to the intimidated: if the sailor was not afraid, why should they hesitate? After all, these great people were only human flesh and blood like themselves. All that had ever been the matter with the proletariat had been that they were afraid of men and women like themselves and their wives and daughters. This was the new and true doctrine—and this sailor was a safe leader, for he had been in raids in Petrograd and Moscow. First a few broke one by one from the crowd and followed him—and then they all came on like a pack of wolves.

They were a mixed horde of many nationalities, of all ages, and with various passions and incentives. Sailors from Kronstadt, raging communists in navy blue shirts, and caps with flowing ribbons. Soldiers from Moscow, with untidy shirts and high boots. Some students, scarcely more than boys, fervently devoted to the revolution and its high aims, and regarding themselves as crusaders for liberty. Several Letts. Nondescripts, who talked broken Russian and wore civilian clothes of all sorts. All heavily armed.

To the people in the house, it was the irruption of the barbarians. The noise had wakened every one. Frightened faces peered palely from doors, and panic-stricken, half-dressed servants scurried about in terror. One man, the hero of the occasion, had the presence of mind to telephone to the commissariat a report of the raid, and inquire whether or not the detachment had really been sent out by the Bolshevik authorities: this was Simon Boschkov, the attendant upon Judge Krassin. His affairs outside of which the judge had complained had made him acquainted with the fact that there were several Bolshevist organizations in being, which sent out parties to raid houses; and that some of these were simply robbers. The commissariat answered that a detail would be sent to inspect the papers of the raiders.

That they had papers was shown by the fact that the Red sailor pulled a sheaf of them from his pocket and looked them over carefully.

"Say," said he to Sasha the maid, "where is Citizen Vladimir— No, we got him at the back gate. Where is Citizen Ilya Krassin?"

Sasha, paralyzed with fright, could not speak. With her eyes wide and staring, she gulped and looked around for help.

"Hurry up!" commanded the sailor. "Lead us to him, or it will be the worse for you!"

Sasha led the way for a space, and then with trembling finger pointed at Ilya's door. With a group of his followers, all bold as lions now, the sailor rushed the door, while Sasha fled to her mistress to tell her that the Bolsheviki had come for Master Ilya, and had already got Master Vladimir. But Sasha was not to have the opportunity all the rest of her life to tell her gossips, her children and her grandchildren, how the great Mrs. Krassin looked when she received this dreadful piece of news; for every door was guarded, and an effort made on the part of the raiders to prevent the inmates from communicating with one another. What she saw within a few minutes, was a detail from the commissariat which arrived, and after inspecting the papers of the raiding detachment, found that they had been signed by Commissar Loris, and were therefore correct. The raid went on.

Mrs. Krassin was alone in her room, from the door of which, after being turned back from several attempts to go to Ilya, she watched the profanation and looting of her house. She was rather pleased at the looting, for it convinced her that the motive of the affair was robbery as she called it, or requisitioning as it would have been termed by the Bolsheviki, rather than an arrest of Ilya. She scarcely thought of Musia, now. It was well for her temporary relief that she could not see what was taking place in her son's room.

He stood looking at them, under guard of a huge Lett with a drawn revolver. Those who had forced themselves into the place were specialists in disorder, Lords of Misrule, and in an incredibly brief time the room was in chaos. The delicate, aristocratic young officer stood, with quivering lips and trembling hands, in the middle of the room, while the big Lett occasionally glanced with contempt at the weakling in his charge.

Ilya seemed to merit the contempt of the huge Lett. He was a pitiable spectacle: a little fellow, delicately nurtured, pampered, capable of commanding respect only through the inherited power of his family; and that power was now not only ruthlessly but insultingly stripped from him. The Bolsheviki were repaying in indignities all the accumulated personal grievances; and Ilya was robbed even of the gifts of defiance and indignation.

He and the big Lett together watched the others of the Bolshevist party as they scurried about the room, searching everywhere, opening drawers and cupboards, dumping the contents of them on the floor with empty boxes, clothing, broken furniture, litter. They found Ilya's supply of monogrammed cigarettes, passed them around, and lighted them with jokes and mock thanks. Soon the room was full of the perfumed smoke. The heavy boots of the soldiers dragged about and over torn white linen clothing.

One of the student members of the party found a beautiful book of poems on the stand and slipped it into his pocket. A big open wooden chest was crammed half full of old letters and scraps of papers to be taken away for further examination. As Ilya saw a packet of letters tied with ribbons dropped into this mass, he darted forward to rescue them; but the sailor snatched them away from him and began reading them.

"Ah," he shouted, "these are good! But we haven't time to go into them now. This one ends, 'Come to me! Your lonely, loving Kittuka!' She'll have to come to you, now, Tovarisch Prisoner. Or maybe I can go to her in your place!"

Clemenceau's Mind Saw Beauty in Nothingness

Shortly before his death, "Tiger" Clemenceau spoke quite freely on his philosophy of life.

"Men do not amuse me any more," he said. "I find that they attach too much importance to themselves. A man consecrates his entire life to beetles and in the end never sees anything in the world but beetles."

Asked what he thought about life after death he said:

"I don't know who had the first idea of Paradise. He must have found life too short, that fellow. Happy man! He wanted it to go on, with a less stupid government and with more amusing diversions.

"But nothingness is really superior to Paradise. Paradise is an improvement—nothingness is perfection. With nothingness, everything arranges itself perfectly."

Lucky Day

Three candles! And each one represents a year of joyous living. This is Carolyn Babush, of 800 Downer Ave., Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Her mother says:

"My mother used California Fig Syrup, and when Carolyn became constipated we got some. It relieved her constipation, sweetened her breath, made her well and happy. I have since used it for all her upsets and colds. It has kept her strong and energetic."

For fifty years, mothers have used California Fig Syrup to overcome a child's bilious, headachy, feverish or fretful spells. Doctors recommend its soothing aid to keep bowels clear in colds or children's ailments; or whenever bad breath, coated tongue or listlessness warn of constipation. It assists in building up weak children.

Little Mary Discovers Shortcomings of Daddy

Little Mary asks him if he knows how to cast out nines. He says no, he never heard of casting out nines, and what is it? She says it's an easy way to check long division and she has learned it at school and it is very simple, and she will show him how it is done.

So she does an example in long division and then begins to cast out nines. He says yes, that is all very well, but why do you do it? She says she does not know why you do it, but that is what you do. He says, well, there must be some reason and he would like to know it.

She says there is no use bothering about the reason, but just try it and see if he can do it. So he tries, but fails, and she tells him that he could not have been paying attention, and to listen very carefully this time. But he finds it rather difficult to concentrate, as he keeps on saying to himself that there ought to be a reason for it and he would like to know. She says, now see if you can do it, and he tries once more and makes several mistakes, and she says you could not have been paying attention again or you would understand, as it is so easy.

So she gives up trying to teach him to cast out nines. But she cannot help wondering how a person who is so slow to catch on could have gone through school and college and even got a degree.—Baltimore Sun.

Natural Dye Production

The production of natural dye stuffs, tanning materials, sizes and such related products is a business of huge proportions, although a slight decline was shown in 1929 from the figures of 1927. The 111 plants engaged in this line turned out materials valued at $34,000,000 during 1929. In poundage this represents almost 550,000,000 pounds of the various materials.

Winter Is Mildest In Years

Old timers who have been contending this winter has been the warmest in many years are upheld by the weather bureau at Fort Snelling where it is revealed that the present season has been the warmest since temperatures were first recorded there. Average temperature for the last 71 days has been 27.2 above zero, a record which has only been broken twice in the last century. 1888, forty-three years ago, the average for the same period was 29.1 and in 1913 the warmest record was established, with an average of 31.9.

Highway Plans for 1931

The epoch of railroad building is being succeeded by an era of road construction. The earth will soon be girdled with ribbons of concrete as well as bands of steel.

Everywhere in the world highway improvements are on the 1931 calendar. Argentina has scheduled 6 million dollars worth of construction, Canada 75 millions, Cuba 35, Phillippine Islands 7, Belgium 9, France 35 and Italy 19 millions. In this country the billion and a half dollar outlay of 1930 will be exceeded.

Demands for more and better highways are universal. Not a continent and hardly a country is excepted. The world has the will to ride. Fortunately this inclination promises to result in the employment of thousands of men in a year when labor is abundant and work at a premium. And so the demands for improved roads may give the world in 1931 not only roadways to the thousands of places they wish to go but pathways to prosperity as well.—Saint Paul Pioneer Press.

4-H Club Reorganized

H. A. Pflughoeft, Crookston, 4-H Club Leader for Northwestern Minnesota, was here Tuesday afternoon for the purpose of helping with the re-organization of our local 4-H club. A good program was given and the club got on the way to a new start with the following local people taking charge:

John Augustine, prominent local dairyman and Holtstein breeder, will conduct the dairy calf club. John Lenitt, well known beef cattle breeder, will have charge of the beef calf club and William Paskewitz, a leading sheep raiser the sheep club. Mrs. Geo. Fricker will direct the girls activities.

Snow-Sled Being Built

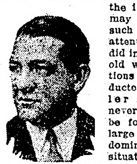
THE INDIVIDUAL YET NEEDED BY BUSINESS

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association



John G. Lonsdale

SOME seem to think that the day of the individual in business has passed. But they are wrong. While the individual may not attract such outstanding attention as he did in the days of old when institutions were conducted on a smaller scale, he nevertheless is to be found in any large corporation, dominating the situation, giving orders here, co-operating there and shouldering the responsibility of keeping a large group of lieutenants, captains and privates working in unison and moving forward under the banner of progress. And all of these are held accountable to the public because the public has entered into a partnership agreement with the corporation through purchase of stock.

Welfare of Workers

Even in the gigantic mergers that have taken place within the last two years there remains more than ever the necessity for a leader, an aggressive personality, whose duty it is to see that basic principles are not forgotten, that the rights and privileges of the individual workers and the customers they serve are as well provided for as in the smaller business units.

It is gratifying to note that our corporations are giving more and more concern to the welfare of their workers. Numerous benefit organizations have been formed, opportunities offered for advancement of education and position, hospital service established and insurance and retirement pensions provided.

This general humanitarian movement in reality is the outgrowth of analysis, which has disclosed the need of improving the well-being of our individual workers, realizing at the same time that our institutions will benefit.

More Cars in State And They Go Farther

The average car owner in Minnesota traveled 525 miles more in 1930 than he did in 1929 according to estimates made by the Minnesota Highway department. The figure is obtained by comparing reports on automobile registration and gasoline shipments made by the Secretary of State and the State Oil Inspector.

The number of motor vehicles registered increased from 727,082 to 744,271, an increase of 2.3 per cent. Gasoline consumption increased from 313,044,077 gallons to 345,312,800 gallons, an increase of 10.3 per cent. The gasoline gallonage figure is obtained by taking the net amount of gasoline taxed, less the amount on which refunds were allowed, due to use in other than motor vehicles.

The amount of gasoline used per vehicle therefore increased from 429 in 1929 to 464 in 1930. Assuming that the average motorist gets 15 miles per gallon, the mileage covered by the average car was 6,435 in 1929 and 6,960 in 1930.

Annual Creamery Meeting To Be Held February 11th

The dairymen will see tbe results of the operation of the Holt Farmers Creamery for 1930, on Wednesday February 11th, when the annual meeting of the association will be held at the Community Hall here, according to an announcement made this week by T. B. Folden, secretary of the organization.

Plans are under way for a big meeting and all the patrons and their wives are asked to attend. Financial reports covering the year's business will be read and distributed to the patrons and stockholders, and plans for the future will be discussed.

Officers for 1931 will also be elected. After the meeting lunch will be served free at the churches to all who attend the meeting.

Personal Property Tax List

This week we are publishing the personal property tax list for 1930. It is just about as wide as it is long in spots, but then we have to take it as it stands.

In the same supplement you will find the minutes of the annual meeting of the county board held the first week in January. Keep your copy of the list for future reference and comparison.

ANNUAL CREAMERY MEETING

NOTICE is hereby given that the Annual Meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers' Co-operative Creamery Company of Holt, Minnesota, will be held in the Community Hall in the Village of Holt, on Wednesday February 11th, 1931, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing two Directors and transacting any other business that may come before the meeting.

The two directors whose terms expire are J. P. Augustine and Olaus Rodahl.

All patrons of the creamery, ladies included, are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

A free lunch will be served at the churches at the close of the meeting.

T. B. Folden, Secretary.

Pointers on Feeding

Feeds may be classed in three divisions; i. e., roughage, succulence, and concentrates.

Roughage includes all kinds of hay and fodder.

Succulent feeds are the green feeds, such as silage, roots, etc.

Concentrates include all the ground feeds, grains, minerals, etc.

A proper mixture of these feeds will insure steady profits to the dairyman who takes the trouble to watch his cows and their feed.

Honor Roll, Six Weeks

Minerva Hanson, Mary Margaret Olson, Stilof Anderson, Esther Hagberg, Gladys Sanoden, Clara Sandberg, Gertrude Voth, Lillion Melo, Margaret Davis, Ruby Hall, Ferne Peterson, Oscar Nohre, Carl Frederickson.

Mary Margaret and Ruth Olson have started school in Middle River.

The following were absent: Ehlert and Kenneth Johnson, Eleanor Larson, Doris Leiran, and Helen Monson.

Commercial Geography

Perry: Why do we say Mexico is sadly deficient of railroads?
Frank: Because it said unfortunate in the book.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

We have everything ready for Manual Training and are about to begin building a slide behind the school house.

Raymond Hagen was the only one absent this week and that was only one day.

The seventh grade has begun study in the new Elson readers.

Geography

Overum: What controls the tide length in the ocean?
Clayton: The wave length.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The 5th and 6th grades are going to carve a farm scene from soap in our industrial arts class.

We are working for a perfect attendance record this 6 weeks.

If we succeed there will be a surprise for us.

Third and Fourth Grades

The 3d and 4th grades have started a race in brushing their teeth. Last week the 3d grade won by a fraction of one point.

Reuben Kolden, Genive Larson, and Dale Lorentson were visitors Friday.

First and Second Grades

Honor Roll for last 6 weeks

2d grade
Francis Johnson, 94
Sylvia Haukeness, 93
1st grade
Russell Sanoden, 91
Lois Hanson, 90

Visitors for two weeks were: Mrs. Lorentson, Stanley Haukeness, Harriet Wahlin, Pierce Hanson, Dorothy Hanson, and Marion Backlund.

Last Friday the 5th and 6th grades entertained us by giving a health program. We were also surprised by a treat which was a rosy red apple for each pupil.

Sylvia Haukeness brought a plant called "The Wandering Jew" to our room.

The 1st and 2d graders must be careful what they say and do, for they have two wise owls watching them. Betty Lou presented us with them.

Andrew L. Sagstuen

With the passing of AndrewL. Sagstuen there is another vacant place in the ranks of the early pioneers. One after another they are crossing the boundary into the great beyond. They leave big empty places, because most of them were people with sterling characters.

Mr. Sagstuen was born in Ringsaku, Norway, in 1851, where he grew to manhood and in the year 1873 was united in marriage to Karen Lier. The young couple spent the first twelve years of their married life in Norway, coming to America in 1885. They resided a few years in Chippewa county before coming to Holt, where Mr. Sagstuen began his pioneer life as a homesteader, tilling the soil that had never before been broken. Here he experienced the troubles and sufferings that many a pioneer must go thru.

After many years of failures and successes, both temporally and spiritually, he passed to the great beyond at his home here last Thursday evening at the age of 79 years.

He leaves to mourn his loss the companion of his youth, the companion of his age, Mrs. Andrew Sagstuen and five children. Lars, Anton, Ingeborg, Ludvig and Carsten; one brother, Chris. Ring of Holt; and the many friends in whose hearts he had reserved a place.

Funeral services were coducted from the Nazareth Lutheran church Wednesday afternoon and a large crowd attended. The many beautiful flowers spoke their quiet but eloquent language of sympathy and love.

Interment was made in the Holt cemetery.

A. B. Conrad, in the memoirs of his father, the late Joseph Conrad, tells many amusing stories that concern an antiquated automobile that might almost be regarded as a family pet.

"His confidence in that dilapidated vehicle was sublime," writes A. B., "and he never doubted that it would take him anywhere he wished to go—and back again. It was one of the old cranking variety, there being no self-starters at that time, and on one occasion father exclaimed:

"Why, this darn thing acts so mulish as to be almost human."

STOMACH WEAK, BLOOD IMPOVERISHED

Hobos Getting Food of Idle

Survey Shows Professional Derelicts Are Waxing in Luxury.

New York.—Professional derelicts get all the pickings while the white collar man, out of work, poor but proud, trousers frayed and his soul seared, must get what satisfaction he can out of being a hero in fiction, according to Capt. John A. Hammill, commanding the Fifth street police station. Captain Hammill was in St. Mark's Catholic mission, the first food depot opened specifically for needy artists, writers, business, and professional women and others in the white collar group, put on their uppers through mergers and general depression.

"I was talking with one of the Bowery boys," Captain Hammill said. "I've known him since I was a sergeant. 'How are things?' I asked him. 'Well, I ain't doin' so bad,' he said. 'Eating six times a day—got ten places to sleep free. Everything's jake, except these bread lines are too far apart. It gets too cold to take them all in. No, I ain't doin' bad.'"

Duped by Panhandlers.

Father Michael Di Ilsle of the Franciscan order, who is in charge of the mission and has converted it into a white collar restaurant, also had been taken in by panhandlers.

"It was over in Jersey some years ago," he said. "A man who told me of his starving wife and children cost me $41. He wasn't even married. He just took me over."

Originally the mission plan was to give food only on Thanksgiving. But when Father Di Ilsle found that so many men and women apparently were ashamed to ask for food at bread lines, he moved back the altar, gave up his reception room, and decided to have mass only on Sundays and food the other days. "From 11 a. m. to 6 p. m. there will be all the food you can eat," he said.

No food can be taken away. The restaurant chains, which supply most of the food, are refusing supplies these days, it was said, unless they are sure the food goes to those actually in need.

Puts Ban on "Chiselers."

"People in most need simply aren't getting a break," said Daniel Platt, in charge of the converted mission. Captain Hammill and lots of others know it and the merchants are getting cynical. Why not? Bums are human and should be fed, but as for the mission, we won't have chiselers.

"It is usual to say, 'Oh, they won't work,' but this morning I proved it. One of our supporters said he'd give twenty of these Bowery men jobs at $7 a day, free board and lodging to pick potatoes.

"But these blighters just out of offices—one of them I know made $200 a week before business got 'fundamentally sound'—jumped at the chance to clear $70 for the next ten days' work. They're working in the cold today, those white collar boys. They have families, some of them, and all they want is a chance."

That the more than fifty bread lines and food depots operating in the city are quite adequate for all the unemployed who are willing to work but unable to find a job has been asserted by the welfare council's co-ordination committee, on the basis of surveys by social agencies.

Colleges, Autos, Roads Blamed for Hobo Life

Ames, Iowa.—It is colleges, automobiles, and paved roads which make hobos, according to Prof. P. H. Wood, Jr., of Iowa State college. The ease of college life inspires men to continue their loafing, while gullible travelers in automobiles give too free a method of transportation, he declared.

1930 Healthiest Year on Record for America

New York.—The best health conditions ever known in the United States and Canada prevailed during the first 11 months of 1930, statisticians of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company, basing their findings upon mortality statistics of 19,000,000 industrial policy holders in the company, announced through the Metropolitan's information service today.

They found that no widespread outbreak of contagious or infectious diseases were reported; that a break was indicated in the long series of annual cancer mortality gains, and that "the single unfavorable item in the 1930 mortality statistics will be a considerable rise in the suicide death rate."

The cumulative death rate for the Metropolitan's industrial policy holders was only 8.6 per thousand at the end of November, compared with 9.4 in 1929.

Divorce Ends Woman's Choice of Two Loves

Memphis, Tenn.—The divorce granted Mrs. Mamye Briggs Scruggs from her husband on cruelty charges was like any other divorce granted in the busy court here, except for one thing:

Seventeen years ago Mamye Briggs, then nineteen, stood in her home with a marriage license in each hand. Before her stood two suitors, close friends and roommates, awaiting her decision.

She made her choice, tore up one of the licenses, and married Douglas P. Scruggs, while Russell J. M. Dodson, the rejected suitor, gave them his blessing.

MAGIC BRAIN FLUID MAKES DUMBBELLS THINK FAST!

German Professor Discovers Method of Speeding Up Sluggish Intellects.

Berlin.—Professor Haberlandt, Innsbruck physician, claims to have discovered a method of injecting intelligence into the brain.

He says that brilliancy in thinking is no longer to be reserved for the few. One injection of his newly discovered fluid suffices to make sluggish brains work perfectly.

Haberlandt declares his discovery is based on observation that the quality of brain matter can only be increased by adding new brain matter to it. The fluid is a heavily concentrated extract of the brains of oxen and calves. One cubic centimeter of it, he says, is equal to 50 grams of fresh brain.

His experiments were first made with guinea pigs. After two weeks, Haberlandt declares, they reacted quickly to intelligence tests. They jumped around in a more lively manner, took more notice of what was going on, were alert to the slightest sounds, and resisted any attempt to grab them.

This led Haberlandt to try his experiments on human beings. A similar extract of the brains of oxen and calves was given to patients suffering from partial inactivity of the brain.

He now intends to develop his method by injecting the fluid into the blood, but believes the method will not attain popularity until the fluid is reduced to a pill.

Thieves Walk Off With Beehives and Honey

Martinsburg, W. Va.—Something new in the way of attractions to thieves was disclosed here when William Lupton, farmer-orchardist, said some unidentified persons had walked away with two of his beehives, the colonies of bees wintering within, and the season's honey yield.

He said he had purposely not gathered the honey this year, thinking the bees would need it for food this winter. He believes the thief wanted the honey and had to take the hives and bees to get the honey.

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

The Recruit

When Montoya joined the recruit squad, four other native Mexicans, an Indian who immediately was called "Chief," and an assortment of patriots from Fort Slocum came with him.

Herding sheep in the high ground of New Mexico failed to equip Montoya for the "squad east" and "squad west" duties of the young men of America in 1917. He found it difficult to learn.

A sergeant named Gray commanded the recruits. He gave them instructions. Then an older compatriot of Montoya, Aragon by name, translated the intricate maneuvers into Spanish so Montoya could understand. Thus tediously, and only through the patronizing assistance of Aragon, did Montoya learn.

Gray saw Montoya again in the Aragon. The little Mexican had become a real soldier, under sound of the guns.

The single stripe of a lance corporal, better known by then as the distinguishing mark of the first-class private, had been dug up somewhere. Montoya wore it.

"Hi, Montoya!" shouted Sergeant Gray as he sidestepped the carcass of a newly-killed horse and pressed forward in the torn-up road north of Montfaucon. "How're you?"

"Fine," answered Montoya with dignity.

"And Aragon. How's Aragon getting on?" cried Gray.

"Aragon?" and the little lance corporal smoothed his new chevron proudly. "Oh! Aragon. He's nothing but a d—d recruit!"

Blood Brothers

In the words of the soldiers, the Australian and American troops were the firmest friends of the World war because they "talked the same language."

This friendship, according to popular belief, was cemented shortly after the first contingent of American soldiers arrived in France.

Some of the American advance troops resented remarks poked at them by a group of Aussies in a Paris railway station, the accepted legend has it. A pitched battle ensued. After the dead and wounded of both sides were carted away the survivors of the two groups embraced one another.

Americans regarded the Aussies as the hardest-boiled soldiers on the Western Front. Therefore, says Maj. Reed G. Landis, World war ace who is a Chicago advertising man now, a conversation of his with an Australian lieutenant colonel, early in 1918, was gratifying.

"I was leaning against a bar in a cafe at Boulogne," says Major Landis, "when an Australian lieutenant colonel entered. Some American doughboys had recently been assigned to the Aussies for training. I thought I'd find out something about them.

"'What do you think of the American infantrymen with you, colonel?' I asked the officer.

"'They are all right, but a bit rough,' answered the Aussie battalion commander."

And that, from an Australian, Major Landis concludes, was the quintessence of praise for the Yanks or for the fighting men of any nation.

Time for Informality

There were times when it was definitely a disadvantage to be a commissioned or non-commissioned officer in the American forces.

This was particularly true when the Germans were sweeping the paths of the Argonne forest and associated bois with machine gun bullets, and when they were spraying the crossroads of the Meuse-Argonne battlefield with their assorted ash cans of high explosives to pile men and horses together in a ghastly heap. Such defensive fighting by the enemy allows him to sit back of the old gun sights and pick out the leaders of an attack.

The officers recognized the fact that they were supplying more than their average in casualties. Whenever possible they did something about it. One of these occasions is said to have been the arrival of a runner at the front in search of his major.

This major was well known and well liked. His roly-poly appearance, his pointed beard and his frank expressions had made him popular with the soldiers. He led them in attacks and he wasn't afraid. However, the major was distinctly annoyed when the runner, arrived at the spot where the major and his men were digging in, yelled at the top of his voice: "Oh, major!"

"How many times have I told you not to do that!" demanded the major, rising from his resting place. "Every German sniper ahead of us is looking for majors. When you want me on the front all that is necessary is to yell: 'Hey! Come here, you old gray-whiskered son of a what!'"

After 40
Bowel trouble is Most Dangerous

Constipation may easily become chronic after forty. Continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles—and a host of other disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. When they need help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

Next time just take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative. See how good it tastes; how gently and thoroughly it acts. Then you will know why it has become the world's most popular laxative. Big bottles—all drugstores.

Birds Worry Fruit Growers

The discovery of a small colony of mina birds at large in southern California has caused considerable concern to a number of chambers of commerce and to grape and cherry growers. For the minas are very intelligent pests, even worse than crows.

Heretofore the only ones known in this country were caged pets. They learn to speak more distinctly than parrots, as visitors to the Catalina Bird park know. The mina belongs to the starling family, being slightly larger than a blackbird. It has a yellow beak and brown feathers.—Los Angeles Times.

H. M. HANSON, County Auditor,
A. N. LODOEN, Chairman Board County Commissioners,
A. C. SWANDBY, Clerk District Court.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption: Resolved that there is hereby appropriated out of the General Revenue fund the following:

For County Attorney's Contingent Fund $1,000.00

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner O. J. Johnson offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption: Resolved that the Ferry license be fixed at $10.00 per year. Resolved that the Auctioneer's license be fixed at $10.00 per year.

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner A. S. Rokke offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Resolved that unless otherwise hereinafter notified the county attorney is hereby instructed to re-try the case of County of Marshall v. Frederick Bakke et al, and to take all steps therein that he may deem advisable.

Resolved further that the county attorney seek to obtain from each bondsman on each depository bond of each closed bank a definite offer to pay a certain amount and be released from all further liability to the county on account of said bond and if possible report the same to the county board at its next meeting.

Resolved further that we request the county attorney to check the tax books in reference to drainage ditch assessments and liens with the State Auditor's record and ascertain if the county has any moneys coming from the State of Minnesota on account thereof on State School, Swamp and Indemnity lands.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman, then presiding, so declared.

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Whereas the banks hereinafter named have been duly designated by the board of audit as depositories of the public funds of this county, be it

Resolved that the proposal, assignment of securities, and the securities mentioned in the assignments, as the same are hereinafter specified, be and the same hereby are in all things approved, to-wit:

Farmers State Bank of Stephen, in the sum of $14,000.00 dated December 27th, 1930.

Peoples State Bank of Warren, in the sum of $22,000.00 dated Dec. 22, 1930.

Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis, in the sum of $100,000.00 dated Dec. 12, 1930.

Farmers State Bank of Middle River, in the sum of $6,000.00 dated Dec. 8, 1930.

Farmers and Merchants Bank of Argyle, in the sum of $10,000.00 dated January 2, 1931.

Midland National Bank and Trust Company of Minneapolis in the sum of $100,000.00, dated December 24, 1930.

Marshall County State Bank of Holt in the sum of $8,000.00 dated Dec. 17, 1930.

The State Bank of Strandquist in the sum of $10,000.00 dated Dec. 6, 1930.

Resolved further that the depository bond of the State Bank of Warren being two bonds, one in the sum of $30,000.00 and one in the sum of $10,000.00, total $40,000.00 with the National Surety Company as surety on each thereof be approved.

Resolved, further, that where an assignment of securities has been given, that in lieu of the actual delivery of the securities to the county that the county accept safe-keeping receipts from any well known Twin City or Duluth bank for said securities in the form as tendered by the above banks and accompanying the assignments, and in those cases where such safe keeping receipts have not yet been delivered to the county that receipts similar in form to those attached to similar assignments during the depository years 1929 and 1930 be accepted. The treasurer shall in no instance deposit any money in any bank until such safe-keeping receipts are in his possession, or the actual securities themselves.

Resolved that action on the proposal of the American National Bank of St. Paul be laid over to the February 1931 meeting of this board because there appears to be no bond accompanying the proposal.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman, then presiding, so declared.

Committees for the ensuing year were appointed by the Chairman as follows:

Committee on Buildings: Lodoen, Pagnac, Rokke.

Select female breeders from the poultry flock that conform to the standard qualifications for their breed and variety, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Don't pick out birds that show disqualifications such as side sprigs in single-comb varieties, stubs in clean-legged breeds, and "foreign" color markings. Choose females that have bright, full eyes, combs and wattles of good texture, wide backs, and fairly deep bodies, and that are well fleshed.

Busy

Jack Natteford, the scenario writer, has an Irish friend who has the distinction of having slipped a fast one over an none other than General Pershing himself.

Pershing was making a personal inspection of the trenches when he came across Pat, busily engaged at a game of catch-as-catch-can along the seam of his coat sleeve.

"Aha!" laughed Pershing pleasantly, "I see you are picking them out."

"I am not!" retorted Pat, "I'm takin' thim as they come."

Iodized Oysters for Ills

Eating of iodized oysters will prevent or cure many intestinal complaints, according to Dr. Rene Loubatie and his laboratory assistant, a chemist named Salles, of Bordeaux, France. In a recent announcement Doctor Loubatie said that six iodized oysters taken at the two principal meals of the day for a fortnight is the finest possible cure for stomach ills. He explained that the iodine was not administered directly to the oysters, but was placed in an oyster park. It rendered the bivalves valuable medicinal foods, he said.

Light Reveals Gas

A new gas detector has been adopted for British mines after tests in the house of commons. The invention, which signals the presence of deadly fumes by lighting a red lamp, was produced about two years ago, but it did not catch on until after trials in parliament in the presence of a conclave of officials.

HOW TO SAVE MONEY WHEN SHOPPING

By MRS. HARLAND H. ALLEN

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

(©, 1922, Harland H. Allen.)

ON LOSING THINGS WHEN SHOPPING

Does it seem sometimes that you have an almost constitutional weakness for losing some of your belongings when you shop? This is a real misfortune, for not only does such a habit represent a real economic loss, and so has a direct bearing on the family finances, but often the articles themselves have a sentimental value for which money cannot compensate.

Whatever the cause of the trouble, whether carelessness, fatigue, or lack of pockets, you can do much to lessen the likelihood of these losses occurring.

The manager of the lost and found department of a big store says that only a few of the many articles picked up in the store every day are marked. Consequently the office can do nothing toward returning them.

Pocketbooks and bags, of course, should always be marked plainly with the owner's name and address inside—a piece of tape sewed in, or a small key tag fastened securely to the lining. An easy way, but not so dependable, is to carry one of your cards in your purse.

It is always difficult to keep track of several packages of different size. The simplest thing to do is to ask the clerk to tie them all together securely whenever you add a new package to your collection. Another plan is to write your name and address on every bundle as soon as you receive it.

Then there is the difficulty of carrying a number of bundles at once. For this one of the many kinds of shopping bags is indispensable. When you go into a rest room, keep a watchful eye on your purchases. And never take off your rings in a public washroom to wash your hands.

Furs should never be tucked carelessly under the arm, nor laid on the counter while examining a purchase. They should be worn with a strong cord that will permit of opening wide for comfort while in a warm store. Always make sure you have closed your bag or purse securely. To walk about in a throng of shoppers with your purse half open on your wrist, is simply to invite pickpockets.

And finally, a wise shopper will make a list of her errands, check them off as they are accomplished, and carefully count her bundles and her change after each purchase.

Of Course.

Coyotes Fall Victims to "Fretful" Porcupine

Coyotes are usually given credit for being cautious and cunning, but there is one bit of woodcraft which the tribe never seems to learn. They cannot get it through their heads that porcupines are not nice animals to monkey with. Ranger "Scotty" Bauman, of the Yellowstone National park service, is one of the most experienced coyote killers of those parts, and he declares that 75 per cent of all the coyotes taken in the park have porcupine quills in them.

"Scotty" recently sent in to park headquarters a report from a friend of his, a Mr. Fisher, of the transportation company, of a distressed coyote he had seen. "More quills in his mouth than the average porcupine has on its body," was Mr. Fisher's summary of the animal's plight. He walked right up to the coyote, and could have killed it with a club had he desired, so engrossed was the poor creature in the task of trying to get rid of the troublesome spines. —Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Happy Again

"Nothing seemed to please Betty Jean," says Mrs. James W. Nolen, 113 Ceanter St., Dallas, Texas. "She was feverish and fretful. Her appetite was poor; she seemed bilious.

"A child specialist recommended California Fig Syrup and it certainly made my little girl happy, well again in a hurry. We have used it over three years for all her upsets."

Mothers by thousands praise this pure vegetable product. Children love it. Doctors recommend it for feverish, headachy, bilious, constipated babies and children; to open the bowels in colds or children's diseases.

Appetite is increased by its use; the breath is sweetened; coated tongue is cleared; digestion and assimilation are assisted; weak stomach and bowels are strengthened.

Carolina Woman Lost 47 Lbs.

In 3 Months and Feels Years Younger

"I have been taking Kruschen Salts for nearly 3 months. I have continued taking one teaspoonful in warm water every morning. I then weighed 217 pounds, was always bothered with pains in my back and lower part of abdomen and sides.

"Now I am glad to say I am a well woman, feel much stronger, years younger and my weight is 170 pounds. I do not only feel better but I look better, so all my friends say.

"I shall never be without Kruschen Salts, will never cease taking my daily dose and more than glad to highly recommend it for the great good that is in it." Mrs. S. A. Solomon, New Bern, N. C., Jan. 1930. "P. S. You may think I am exaggerating by writing such a long letter but truly I feel so indebted to you for putting out such wonderful salts that I cannot say enough."

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts 4 weeks costs but 85 cents at druggists the world over. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast. Attention to diet will help—cut out pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—the Kruschen way is the safe way to lose fat. Try one bottle and if not joyfully satisfied—money back.—Adv.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's finace. Mrs. Krassin expressed fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Mrs. Krassin conducts Vilinsky in an inspection of the home and contrives that he shall not see Ilya. The commissar brutally insults Musia. Mrs. Krassin's thoughts are all of Ilya. Musia feels herself defenseless and wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women." To Vladimir, Musia criticizes her brother Ilya's acceptance of the situation. She knows Vladimir is a member of an organization working for the downfall of the Bolsheviki. Vladimir kills a Bolshevik soldier and is arrested. A raiding party searches the Krassin home.

A faint blush for a moment drove off the pallor of Ilya's face, as the packet of letters went back into the chest with the other odds and ends.

All the inhabited part of the house was covered in the search; but no other room was wrecked with the destructive harshness which marked the work of Ilya's apartments. This operation lasted for more than three hours.

Musia was roused by the dreadful turmoil and commotion; by the incredible slamming of those old doors, never slammed before; by the trampling of men wearing heavy boots and carrying heavier weights; by mysterious crashes of furniture; by the rough and strangely loud voices of the raiders, so out of keeping with the traditions of the quiet, dignified old mansion, and therefore all the more terrifying. But her terror did not arise from these things. All the abject fear which had overcome her at the visit of Vilinsky returned upon her.

She finally summoned up the resolution to look out into the hall—she looked for him—or for Vladimir. She saw the Bolsheviki in their horrible garments, their filthy beards, their huge boots, and with their excited expressions, which to her seemed fiendish. They were unspeakably hideous to her; but as she saw some man other than Vilinsky giving them orders, she actually felt a sense of relief.

Musia took advantage of a moment when the way seemed clear, and holding her little blue kimono about her with trembling hands, she stole toward her mother's room. She paused at Ilya's door to see what was happening, and to look after his welfare if there was anything she could do, and looking in, she saw her brother, dressed now, but negligently, under guard of the Lettish soldier, his room looking as if it had been ravaged by a tornado.

The Bolsheviki, as if a little awed by the sudden appearance of this young lady, drew back in an instant's relapse into respect. The Kronstadt sailor, their commander, however, looked boldly at her, smiled, and putting into his pocket a locket studded with diamonds, in which was the picture of a young girl—the writer, perhaps, of the packet of letters—came boldly toward Musia. The others turned away as if disapproving of her very existence. Without accelerating her pace, but only gathering her kimono more closely about her as if to avoid contamination, Musia walked on to the door of her mother's room, with bent head ignoring the intruders. The sailor looked after her a moment, took a step or so as if about to pursue, and turned to the more important matters of the raid. Musia looked admiringly at her mother as she saw her, fully dressed, majestic as ever, calmly keeping her countenance.

"We owe this," said she, without any preface as Musia came in, "to that 'aristocrat' of whom Colonel Boyarsky told us."

"To whom?" asked Musia, thinking this a very strange speech.

"To that Loris! He signed the papers authorizing this raid. But I feel sure"—this in a whisper—"that it is only a raid. They are not after Ilya, or it would be conducted differently! Some one would have told me."

Musia was not struck by the fact that her mother had expressed no relief at seeing her daughter coming into her room safe after an hour or two of this irruption into the house of the licenseless horde; that she did not thank God for deliverance of the most defenseless of her family from insult or worse; or that her most exigent thought was for her son. It seemed the most natural thing in the world to one of Mrs. Krassin's family; and, indeed, Musia had not been, in fact, conscious of personal peril from these men. When one has dominated a dog all his life, he does not at first realize when he runs mad, that he will bite, or that his bite is venomous. She sadly suspected that her mother might be mistaken as to her brother's safety, but she saw no reason for saying so.

"A moment ago," said Mrs. Krassin in a half whisper, "I saw that brown-whiskered soldier who just looked in here, pick up my diamond earrings. He did not even look at them. In a second they disappeared into his pocket. I didn't say a word—on account of Ilya!"

Musia nodded agreement, and pressed her mother's hand to her bosom. The deluge had swept away the barriers that had separated them. Musia's warmth and expansiveness which had always seemed to repel her mother, because, perhaps, the older woman felt her lack of the temperament, which ought to have responded to them, seemed to comfort Mrs. Krassin now. All at once they understood each other without words. Their perceptions were so keen that a glance, a pressure of the hand, a half word was enough.

"They took many other things, too," whispered Mrs. Krassin. "I saw, but I never said a word, nor seemed to see."

"The main thing is Ilya!" Musia whispered back.

Thus they sat for a long time, bent toward each other, talking in low tones as the noise of the ravage receded from them to other portions of the house, uttering half phrases, Mrs. Krassin racked by unadmitted anxiety as to Ilya's safety. The guards were re-established at the door now, as Musia found when, at her mother's suggestion, she started to investigate as to Ilya's whereabouts. Musia, sharing in her mother's anxiety, dreaded the effect on her mother if the scene she had glimpsed through Ilya's door meant, as she believed, that her brother was in custody. Sometimes they would hear the tramp of heavy feet coming nearer, and Musia would cling to her mother with paling cheeks, while Mrs. Krassin would sit straight, her head proudly thrown back, looking defiance at the doorway. A painter might make a picture of it. The steps would go on; the two women would relax; they knew that it was useless for them to try to interfere. Mrs. Krassin expressed surprise that Musia had succeeded in getting through to her mother's room; and Musia told her what a comfort it was to her to be there. They agreed that for them to try to defend Ilya or argue for him would be worse than useless: it was best to remain as quiet as possible.

The raiding party became weary, after a while; for the Krassin house was very large. The motor truck before the door became loaded with loot, leaving but a small space for the prisoner and his guards. Ilya, finally successful in putting on his clothes, was allowed to take with him a change of underwear, a toothbrush and a towel, but was forbidden a razor, and went forth out of the house under a strong guard. In the street the Bolsheviki delayed, wrangling as to the way in which the prisoner and his guard were to be accommodated in the truck. Finally the Kronstadt sailor made the brown-whiskered man and a sailor the personal guards of the prisoner, and placed the rest of the detachment at the four corners of the truck to guard the "confiscated" property. This did not please the brown-whiskered man, who wanted to guard the loot; and a quarrel raged violently for a few minutes.

Ilya did not hear it. He turned his poor white face toward the house. The windows looked dark; but in one of them two pale bleak faces stared out at him, and he knew them for the faces of his mother and sister. The boy strained his eyes to see more distinctly his mother's face: it seemed to him that it was deathly pale, with a wan quivering smile of encouragement upon it. His heart felt as if compressed in a vise. He started forward as if to speak to her. . . . A heavy hand dropped on his shoulder.

"Into the car, Tovarisch Prisoner!" said a rough voice.

Ilya obediently stepped into the truck—he had obeyed some one all the days of his life. The quarrel seemed settled. The brown-whiskered fellow smiled triumphantly as, holding a rifle in his hands, he sat on a huge half-open packing case. From under the cover of this improvised seat there spread out under his feet a rich purple velvet gown.

The truck rumbled slowly away—but even above its roar the raiders heard from the Krassin house a piercing shriek as of one struck with the agony of death. As in the days of Herod of old, "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children."

Faith of Brothah Joe Surely at Low Point

Old Joe, writes Mr. Newton, was forever getting religion and backsliding. One summer he suffered no fewer than seven of these successful wrestles with Satan, and a particularly powerful preacher was called to the rescue.

"Have faith, Brothah Joe, have faith," exhorted the good man. "Hitch you'self to faith and git goin'. Don't you know faith no biggah than a mustahd seed'll move a mountain?"

"Sho' does, sho' does," groaned Old Joe Black. "But jist this minute I ain't got faith enough to move tha: mustahd seed."—Collier's Weekly.

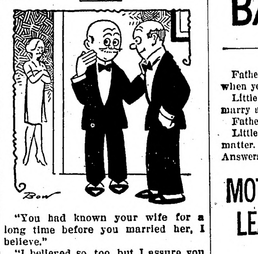
"Times certainly change."

"Whatcher driving at now?"

"I was just thinking that the statues of great men in the future may show them speaking into a microphone instead of astride a horse with a sword dangling."—Florida Times-Union.

HADN'T KNOWN HER



"You had known your wife for a long time before you married her, I believe."

"I believed so, too, but I assure you it's not true."

Caution

Speak gently. It is better far
At least while feeling ground
The man may be a pugilist
And heavy on the pound.

Unidentified Retributions

"Do you believe that our sins are punished on this earth?"

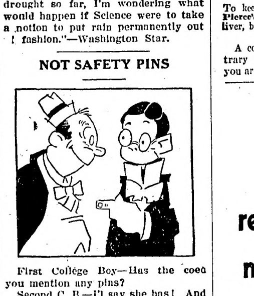
"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "I don't doubt that we deserve all our boredom and annoyances. But it would be more satisfactory if we were allowed to know just what delinquency of conduct each penalty is intended to fit."—Washington Star.

Growing Suspicious of Science

"What makes you so indignant with science in general?"

"It's altogether too powerful and mysterious," answered Farmer Corntossel. "After our experience with drought so far, I'm wondering what would happen if Science were to take a notion to put rain permanently out of fashion."—Washington Star.

NOT SAFETY PINS



First College Boy—Has the coed you mention any pins?

Second C. B.—I'll say she has! And they're no safety pins either when you take too long a look.

Standards of Beauty

Secrets of beauty rest unknown.
A knock-kneed goddess carved in stone
In ancient days was stood apart
And was considered Real Art.

Done Intentionally

"You have said some very nonsensical things in your speeches."

"Intentionally," answered Senator Sorghum. "In studying the requirements of my time I have decided that the great demand is not so much for politicians as for comedians."—Washington Star.

Some Difference

Wife—You don't give me such nice presents as you used to.

Husband—No; but I pay for those you give yourself now.

Poor Burglar

"Just think! While I was out with some of the fellows the other night, a burglar broke into our house."

"Did he get anything?"

"I'll say he did—my wife thought it was me coming home."

Worse and Worse

Uncle Hiram—It says here in the paper a robber robbed a bank on Sunday, Matilda.

Aunt Matilda—Well, what is the world coming to—robbing banks on Sundays, Hiram?

FEEL MEAN?

Don't be helpless when you suddenly get a headache. Reach in your pocket for immediate relief. If you haven't any Bayer Aspirin with you, get some at the first drugstore you come to. Take a tablet or two and be rid of the pain. Take promptly. Nothing is gained by waiting to see if the pain will leave of its own accord. It may grow worse! Why postpone relief? There are many times when Bayer Aspirin will "save the day." It will always ease a throbbing head. Quiet a grumbling tooth. Relieve nagging pains of neuralgia or neuritis. Check a sudden cold. Even rheumatism has lost its terrors for those who have learned to depend on these tablets.

Gargle with Bayer Aspirin at the first suspicion of sore throat, and reduce the infection. Look for Bayer on the box—and the word Genuine in red. Genuine Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart.

BAYER ASPIRIN

Planning Ahead

Father—What are you going to do when you grow up?

Little Daughter—I'm going to marry an engineer.

Father—What?—A civil engineer?

Little Daughter—Oh, that doesn't matter. I'll soon make him civil.—Answers.

MOTHERS ARE LEARNING USES OF MAGNESIA

From the beginning of expectancy until baby is weaned, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia performs the greatest service for many women.

It relieves nausea, heartburn, "morning sickness," inclination to vomit; helps digestion. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is better than lime water for neutralizing cow's milk for infant feeding.

All drugstores have Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in generous 25c and 50c bottles. Always insist on the genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

One, for That Matter

"For two pins," writes A. H. R., "the average husband would not sew any buttons on his underwear."

To keep clean and healthy take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate liver, bowels and stomach.—Adv.

A cough is another of those contrary things—hangs on only while you are abed trying to sleep.

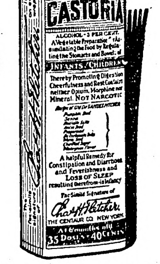
Wakeful restless CHILD needs Castoria



WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times it's constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

Readily obtained at any drugstore, the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature and the name Castoria on the wrapper like this:

CASTORIA

Lutheran Ladies Aid Annual Report

The Ladies Aid of the Nazareth Lutheran Church held their Annual Meeting in the church parlors on Friday, January 16.

In the year 1930 the Ladies Aid held 18 regular meetings, served one waffle supper, sponsored the making of one quilt on which they sold numbers, served dinner at the annual Harvest Festival held at the Hjalmar Johnson home September 7. The money taken in at the festival is not listed in the receipts as it was applied directly on the church budget at that time.

A motion was made and carried that the names of those who are to serve for the Ladies Aid during the coming year be published in the local paper according to the schedule made out by the members of the aid and, which will show when your turn comes to serve without being asked as to when can you serve. Then if you cannot serve when your turn comes, you will have a chance to get someone to take your place.

A motion was made and carried that the president appoint one lady to take the treasurers duty at every other meeting.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, February 6, 1931. Volume 20; Number 41.

Selvig's Letter

Congress appears to be drifting toward an extra session, shortly after March 4th, when the present session expires by provision of the constitution The busines of the government has grown to such an extent that the "short session" seems inadequate for the routine business and leaves but little opportunity for discussion and settlement of large and vital issues.

This, if it happens, will bring on the figh for control of both branches of Congress at once. In the House the actual Republican majority is now four, owing to vacancies caused by death on the Democratic side. In order to organize, however, the present Repulican leadership will have to give up much of its power, thru amendments of the rules, in order to hold the westerners in line, and the House will become more responsive to the demands of the "radical" element than it has been during the past four year.

Cashing of the soldier's compensation certificates is favored by a majority in both branches of Congress, but opposed by the Treasuary Department. There is a feeling that payment of the certificates at this time would place a large amount of money in circulation and help overcome the depression. It would also be advantageous from the view point of the government, which can at present sell its securities at a much lower rate of interest than is being paid on the certificates.

One billion dollars of American capital was invested in foreign countries during 1930, bringing the total of our foreign investments up to fifteen billion dollars. Add the eleven billion dollars war debts and the world owes us twenty-six billion.

Death of Olaf Johnson

Mr. and Mrs. August Johnson of Rollis township received the sad news on Monday telling of the death of their son Olof, who died that day at 10 o'clock in the hospital in Bottineau, N. Dak., following an attack of pneumonia and complications.

Funeral services will be held from the home at 1 p. m. Monday afternoon.

Death of Mrs. Pearson

The people of this community were shocked on Wednesday to learn of the sudden death of Mrs. Elmer J. Pearson of Minot, No. Dak. Mrs. Pearson was formerly Evelyn Wegge the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge, pioneer farmers of this community.

Mrs. Pearson who had undergone an operation for apendicitis at a Minot hospital was getting ready to go home when she died suddenly after eating breakfast.

New Hospital To Be Dedicated Saturday

St. Luke's Hospital, at Thief River Falls, one of the most modern and most completely equipt institutions of its kind in the Northwest, will be formally dedicated Saturday, February 7. The building will be open for public inspection during the morning and afternoon, the dedication exercises being held at the Municipal Auditorium commencing at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

ANNUAL CREAMERY MEETING

NOTICE is hereby given that the Annual Meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers' Co-operative Creamery Company of Holt, Minnesota, will be held in the Community Hall in the Village of Holt, on Wednesday February 11th, 1931, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing two Directors and transacting any other business that may come before the meeting.

The two directors whose terms expire are J.P. Augustine and Olaus Rodahl.

All patrons of the creamery, ladies included, are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

A free lunch will be served at the churches at the close of the meeting.

T. B. Folden, Secretary.

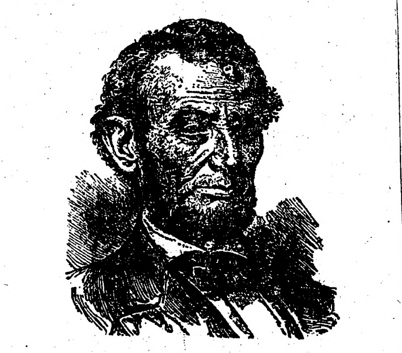
"Remember the Annual Meeting"

There are over six hundred co-operative creameries in the state, making more than 180 million pounds of butter a year, and paying from four to seven cents more a pound for butterfat than any other institution buying butterfat.

Co-operative creameries are the main source of revenue for many of the small towns of the state, and should be well supported by all concerned.

Come to your creamery's annual meeting and see for yourself just what its business is and how it is carried on. It will be a day well spent. Most of your neighbors are going.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co.



Holding a nation together in a time when it threatened to split in two sections is no mean task. Abe Lincoln, whose birthday we celebrate next Wednesday, did just this—therefore we venerate his memory. Abe the Olympian will live forever.

School Notes

High School

Is it stays cold a few more days the boys will play hockey with Middle River.

Helen Monson returned to school after an illness lasting 3 weeks.

The 4-H club held their meeting in the schoolhouse on Wednesday night.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Ruth Bottem was absent on Tuesday.

The 7th and 8th grade girls are making wooden toys.

The 8th grade pupils are studying poems about Lincoln.

The 7th grade have just completed the study of the war of 1812 in history and the 8th grade the study of the Civil War.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The 6th grade girls demonstrated the art of candy making on Monday morning. They treated the 5th grade and faculty and were pronounced good cooks.

Eleanor Peterson and Opal Sanoden have been absent so our "surprise" will be postponed until a later date.

We are observing the birthdays of Washington, Lincoln and Lindberg this month by recalling their lives and decorating the room in their honor.

Third and Fourth Grades

Eleanor Haukeness had a perfect score in her 5th self-testing drill. Eleanor is in the 3d grade.

The 3d grade has finished its Eskimo booklets. They also have an Eskimo scene on the sand table.

Our 4th grade won in the tooth brushing contest.

First and Second Grades

Visitors for all week were:

Harriet Wahlin, Pierce Hanson, Dorothy Hanson, Dale Lorentson, Estelle Redal.

Our room is now being decorated with valentines.

The 1st and 2d grades are having stories of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln.

We have now finished the book, "The Tree Dwellers," and are now studying about the early cavemen. From this we have drawn our own conclusions and would rather live now than in those days.

The 2d grade boys and girls earned a prize, which was a framed picture of "The Melon Eaters, by Murillo, for learning the poem "The Dutch Lullaby" over Saturday and Sunday.

We all feel sure that the Ground Hog never saw his shadow on Monday.

A Communication

My Dear Editor:

I wish to inform you that the condition of my bank account makes it impossible for me to send you a check in response to your request.

My present condition is due to the effects of federal laws, state laws, county laws, corporation laws, by-laws, brother-in-laws, mother-in-laws and outlaws that have been foisted upon an unsuspecting public. Through these various laws I have been held down, held up, walked on, sat on, flatened and squeezed until I don't know where I am, what I am or why I am.

These laws compels me to pay a merchants tax, capital stock tax, excess tax, income tax, real estate tax, property tax, auto tax, gas tax, water tax, light tax, cigar tax, cigarette tax, dog tax, school tax and carpet tax. My business has been so governed that I don't know who owns it. I am suspected, expected, inspected, disrespected, examined, required, commended and compelled until all I know is that I am supposed to provide an inexhaustible supply of money for every known need desired or hoped by the human race, and because I refuse to donate to all till i. e. have to go and beg I am cussed, discussed, boycotted, talked to, talked about, lied to, lied about, held up, held down and robbed until I am nearly ruined. So the only reason I am clinging to life is to see what in heck is coming next.

Charge Murders To Kid Bandits

Kansas City Police Round Up Gang of Fiendish Youngsters.

Kansas City, Mo.—An underworld of youngsters, callow boys and flighty girls of from fourteen to nineteen years old, in the Rosedale district, Kansas City, Kan., furnished the latest amazing segment of a murder trail first scented by the police six weeks ago.

This trail has included perhaps six murders. Five boys have been sentenced to the reformatory. Another boy member was killed accidentally. The seventeen-year-old leader now admits a Kansas murder and is accused with a boy partner of the William H. Price murder here. Two fourteen-year-old girls were arrested with this pair. Then another boy and three other girls were arrested in Rosedale, and still another boy was sought as members of the gang or as acquaintances of members of the gang.

Parents Pray for Leader.

The leader, Everett Haldiman, has parents and a sister who tell of having prayed for his Christian conversion. Haldiman and Willis Harley, both seventeen years old, admit the murder of a filling station operator at Tyro, Kan., early in December, and are in jail at Independence, Kan., under this charge. They are accused by Fern McNabb, fourteen-year-old Kansas City (Kan.) girl associate, as the murderers here November 26 of Price, a bakery wagon driver.

A second girl, Aletha Rush, fifteen, Sioux City, Iowa, was arrested with Haldiman and Harley.

The wonder is that this child underworld has resisted arrest so long. Accident and coincidence helped the police. Except when hopelessly surrounded with evidence and under arrest, none of the scattered members has talked. Even after the police had the names of the gang, they sought futilely for weeks to find them or link them with contemporary crime.

Accused of Other Murders.

Some of the other murders for which suspicion points to the gang, according to B. H. Thurman, chief of detectives, are the slaying May 10 of Irving Mallin, fruit store operator; Vincent Weber, deaf mute, slain August 15, and John E. Ramsden, slain August 18.

It has been difficult to trace the perpetrators of these murders, because few witnesses could agree as to their description. Now the police know Haldiman and his associates used make-up and cork to change their appearance. The Mallin murderer looked like a negro to one witness, but another was certain the slayer had a white man's hair. The Weber slayer looked both young or old to different witnesses; something about his face defied description. The police now believe the slayer was made up. One man has been tried and acquitted in this case, the identifications not being accepted by the jury.

It is quite plain that the victims have been slain because they thought their assailant was bluffing them; he was young and harmless looking. Yet he shot at the first sign of resistance, and he shot straight. That picture fits Haldiman.

Fear of the rope in Missouri is all that led Haldiman to admit the Tyro crime, Chief Thurman says.

Pickpocket Gets Judge's Wallet on Way to Court

Boston.—Even a judge is not immune from pickpockets. A "dip," apparently in attendance at a trial in Suffolk County Superior court, made the most of his idle moments and "lifted" a wallet containing $65 from the person of Judge Allen Buttrick. The theft occurred as the jurist was riding to his office in a crowded passenger elevator.

Village Smithies Report Good Year

Washington.—The "Village Blacksmith" has come back into his own. According to the report of his activities for the first nine months of 1930 he is busier now than at any time in history.

The report disclosed that his anvil hammered out $200,000,000 worth of goods in 1930. This business can be laid to the present trend in architecture, which is calling for ornamental metals for home and building decoration. The decreased demand for horseshoes may really have been a blessing in disguise as it forced the smith to return to his true craft—ornamental ironwork.

50 Doctors See Glass Taken From Body

New Orleans.—A remarkable operation was revealed here when Dr. D. L. Watson admitted that he removed from the stomach of Dorothy Wahl, nineteen, of Key West, Fla., a piece of glass two and one-half inches long which had been in her body for 11 years.

Fifty doctors witnessed the operation.

MODEL CITY SPRINGS LIKE MAGIC FROM RUSSIAN BOG

Build Community In Which 50,000 Will Live and Produce 150,000 Cars Yearly.

New York.—An American engineering firm is building a complete city, covering 3,000 acres and costing $60,000,000, on what used to be swamp land near Nizhni Novgorod in Russia.

When it is finished, about a year from now, the city will house 50,000 persons. Most of them will work in a vast factory from which 150,000 Ford cars and trucks will be distributed over Russia each year.

This gigantic undertaking, the Review of Review says, is part of the Russian five-year plan now so much in the public eye. The construction work is being done by the engineering firm headed by W. J. Austin of Cleveland, who has had an opportunity to observe at first hand the progress of the Soviet attempt to turn Russia from an agricultural to an industrial nation in a few years. Whether the country can be yanked out of its medieval habits and trained in the ways of Twentieth century efficiency within five years is a question Mr. Austin cannot answer—but he is sure that the transformation will be effected in part at least.

"Some people," the engineer said, "believe Russia is going too fast. They doubt whether the Russian worker, molded in physical and psychological habit by generations of primitive hand labor in the fields, can so quickly adjust himself to the machine gait of modern American methods.

"Soviet officials dismiss this fear with the declaration that the machine will gear the worker, rather than that it will have to be geared to the worker. This question, involving the degree of success of the great experiment, is largely one of the adaptability of human beings," he declared.

However efficient the workers may prove to be, there is no doubt, the Review of Reviews article says, about the facilities for living and working with which they will be equipped. The factories, in which it is understood the Ford Motor company is not financially interested although it is giving technical advice, are the last word in modern American production units. And the living quarters, four-story apartments, are steam heated, lighted by electricity and fully American in every sense.

Montana Schools Have One Pupil Each

Helena, Mont.—There are seven schools in Montana which have only one pupil, according to the biennial report of the department of education.

There are 33 schools which have only two pupils; 40 with only three; 74 with four, and 123 with five pupils each.

The total enrollment this year in Montana's public schools is 120,357, an increase of 2,365 over last year.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expressed fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Musia wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women." To Vladimir, Musia criticizes her brother Ilya's acceptance of the situation. She knows Vladimir is a member of an organization working for the downfall of the Bolsheviki. Vladimir kills a Bolshevik soldier and is arrested. A raiding party searches the Krassin home. Ilya is taken prisoner.

CHAPTER VIII

A Strange and Valuable Piece of Goods

As the days passed with Ilya still hidden in the black cavern of Bolshevism Mrs. Krassin felt despair rolling over her in great waves—actual waves came upon her, in surges which began in her breast and swelled until the very ends of her fingers tingled with the misery of it; and she would start up with clenched hands like one in the extremity of desperation rising to meet some grisly foe in a battle to the very death.

Once she forgot that she was not alone, and summoning Sasha, the maid, asked for her cloak. She looked embarrassed when Musia asked if she were going out, and putting the cloak on went into the grounds and wandered about—a thing which she never did. She walked about mourning that she could not have Ilya with her instead of Musia. Ilya, she deceived herself into saying, would find some way of liberating Musia if their places were reversed; but Musia could do nothing. Nothing!

She thought of what she herself would do if she could to save her son from danger. If only Ilya had committed murder, so that she could take the crime upon herself; if she could only submit to some great humiliation to save him; if she could have her limbs torn off for him; if only the Bolsheviki were simple savages who would be satisfied with torturing some one, and she could go to the stake, or be dragged by wild horses for him. Jesus, she thought, was crucified for the world; but how glad would she be to go to the cross for one little fair-haired boy!

Next day, as Mrs. Krassin walked about the room, she stopped beside Musia, who was reading a book of plays, and looked down attentively for a long time at the blond head so prettily and studiously bent over her book. Musia was sweeter and more attractive than ever, she thought—and there were poets and other writers who spoke of the great power of beauty! It was beauty which one time launched a thousand ships and fired the topless towers of Ilium; but what could her daughter's sweetness and beauty do in this time of awful need?

A feeling of antagonism stirred in her heart at this helplessness, when anyone ought to be able to do something. Musia, on her part, looked up with her pitying smile, and thought how much her mother had aged. Her purplish mottled cheeks sagged more than ever, and the skin of her throat hung loose over the lace. There was indecision, a thousand tormenting fears in Mrs. Krassin's face. She was seeing a vision of Ilya, led out to be shot against some blank wall.

Her mind, usually clear and well balanced within its limitations, worked heavily at this one terrible thought. She stood for a long time studying Musia as if she were some strange and valuable piece of goods; then her eyes looked past the girl into vacancy. She seemed in a dream; but in that dream her will decided a conflict within itself; and when she returned to a consciousness of her surroundings, she had decided something which thus far she had confronted only vaguely. The plan she had adopted in this half-trance now looked so simple, so obvious, that she became impatient to put it into execution at once: but when she spoke of it to her daughter she chose her words carefully and watched Musia closely, as if, for the first time, she was afraid the girl would refuse to assent to her mother's wish.

"I think," said she very impressively, "that I have come to a reasonable, an important, and a good decision. The longer we leave Ilya in prison the worse it is sure to be. The Bolsheviki are whimsical. They get new commandors every little while. This Loris is a man who can see our point of view, at least, from what the colonel says of him. The next to follow may be a madman. We must act immediately and energetically."

These were the words of the Mrs. Krassin of old; but her manner was new to Musia. Perhaps for the first time in Mrs. Krassin's life, she was appealing, hopeful. She approached Musia as if to embrace her, half commanding, half begging for approval of her plan.

"Yes, mother," said Musia, "if you can think of anything we can do—"

"I think, dear, it would be good if you would go with me to see this Bolshevist commissar."

"Of course, mother darling!" exclaimed Musia, touched by her mother's meek and pleading mode of addressing her. "I will go with you anywhere. You needn't ask me in that way. Am I not still your little girl?"

Impulsively she threw both arms about her mother's neck and kissed her affectionately; Mrs. Krassin gently but quickly disengaged herself from Musia's grasp. . . . She went to an old mahogany secretary, opened it, and from a secret compartment took out a little malachite box. She laid the small casket in Musia's lap.

"The remainder of our jewels," she said.

Musia looked up at her encouragingly; for she understood her mother and divined the cause of her embarrassment, she thought.

"These jewels," Mrs. Krassin went on, "are always handed down to the daughters. Are you willing to ransom Ilya with them?"

"Why, mammy, darling," exclaimed Musia, "how can you ask! We will give up everything for Ilya."

"Everything," repeated Mrs. Krassin.

"Everything," said Musia again. "We must take this casket with us."

Mrs. Krassin sighed with satisfaction. She opened the lovely box.

"An opal and diamond necklace," said she, letting the splendid thing fall to its full length. "It is very precious. Here are several diamond rings. See this emerald brooch! And this, and this, and this—all valuable. And we still have some money in gold: not much, but it may help. Will not those dogs rather have these things than the blood of my innocent boy?"

"You know," said Musia, lowering her voice and speaking lightly and hurriedly as if to indicate to her mother that she did not care a fig for the jewels, "I have still in my room several little pieces of jewelry."

"Oh, no!" interposed Mrs. Krassin as if the girl's generosity pained her. "We don't need them! Keep them!"

She took the jewels one by one from the box and stared at them as if trying to fix her thoughts on them. With a bit of suede which she found in the bottom of the casket she rubbed some of the stones, then examined them as they lay in her hand; then forgot what she was doing and looked at the jewelry with her thoughts afar off.

"Yes," said she at last, "Loris is the best person for us to see. We shall have to go down into the railway yards where he lives in his car. Tomorrow morning. I think he receives in the morning. Loris has more power than any of them."

"I feel sure of it," replied Musia, "and from what is said, he is more intelligent than the rest. I am glad it is not that beast Vilinsky!"

Mrs. Krassin now sat with puckered brows, frowning, pondering. When Musia spoke of Vilinsky as a beast, her mother shot a quick glance at her—this was the nearest Musia had ever come to any mention to her mother of any subject connected with sex. But, probably, after all, she did not know what Vilinsky had meant. Probably, notwithstanding her expression, it was a random shot drawn from her by her repulsion to the man. The matter passed from the other woman's mind. At such a time it was of no consequence anyhow. There was something she wished to say to Musia—she felt a sudden revulsion against that visit to the Bolshevik commissar's headquarters. It was impossible to tell Musia why; impossible to give up the visit. Ilya might even now be marching out to stand before the wall. . . . She resumed the busy air of a person going over details of not much importance.

"And while I think of it," she remarked casually, "don't tell anyone we're going."

She is afraid our friends will stop us, thought Musia. Mother afraid of such a thing, of all people in the world! Poor mother! Of course they would stop us if they could, but all the same, it must be done. "No, mammy," she said, "I won't say a word."

Potato's Great Value

Popular as the potato is all over the world we have always failed to give it full credit for its dietic value. Next to corn it is our greatest food plant, and outside the corn belt it is without a rival in North America, Europe or Asia. If at any time anyone fears the early approach of serious food shortage, let him consider the potato and take comfort. This article is second only to wheat in the number of times a year that it is eaten in America, and in Europe it probably stands first. Analysis shows that it is close to wheat in actual food value, but it contains so much water that four times as much potato as wheat must be eaten in order to obtain the same amount of nourishment.

HIS TOOTHACHE WINS BRIDE IN QUEER ROMANCE

Travels Far to Get Molar Yanked; Takes Girl He Had Never Seen.

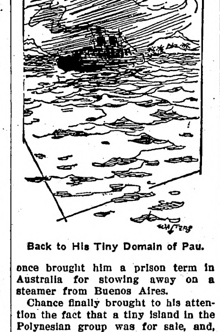
Montreal.—It isn't every day that a man travels 2,500 miles to have a tooth pulled, and when at the end of his journey he wins a bride "sight unseen" in a romance linking three continents together, it's probably news.

Hugo Reitmeier, former bank clerk of Langeburg, Germany, did all that however, and is now on his wedding trip, back to his tiny domain of Pau, in the Polynesian Island of the Pacific, where he rules as an almost absolute monarch.

Reitmeier has lived a life of travel and adventure seldom encountered outside the pages of fiction, for more than half of his forty years of life. After his experiences in the World war, he found himself unable to settle back into the dull routine of a bank clerk's existence and, accordingly, shipped before the mast.

Many Parts of World.

The ensuing years saw him in many parts of the world, as coalheaver, deckhand or engine room worker, in ships of five different nations; and once brought him a prison term in Australia for stowing away on a steamer from Buenos Aires.



Back to His Tiny Domain of Pau.

Chance finally brought to his attention the fact that a tiny island in the Polynesian group was for sale, and, with his savings, he purchased it, and set himself up there as a trader—the only white man within hundreds of miles.

He named his island Pau, the native term for "journey's end," and was contented there until he developed a toothache. There was not a dentist to be found anywhere on the Polynesian isles and finally, after enduring the pain for nearly a year, Reitmeier struck out for the steamer lanes and worked his way to Vancouver, where he had his teeth thoroughly overhauled.

Birth of Romance.

Before returning to his island home, Reitmeier visited some German friends in Waldeck, Manitoba, and there was induced by his hostess to enter into correspondence with her sister, Franziska, in Regensporgen, on the Rhine.

Franziska was alone in Germany since the death of her mother, and Reitmeier's stories of adventure in all corners of the globe and of his island home 'neath the tropic skies, fired her imagination and won her admiration. Their correspondence ripened into love, and finally Franziska agreed to become the uncrowned queen of the island of Pau.

She migrated from Germany and was married to Reitmeier on the immigration docks here, and the couple are now enroute to Polynesia where they hope to establish a white colony.

Polish Couple Murder Yankee; Find He's Son

Warsaw.—A tragedy in which a man and his wife murdered a man, not knowing he was their own son, an American, named Andrew Cygan, was reported recently from the village of Zagainiki.

Twenty years ago Mr. Cygan, then fifteen years old, emigrated to Detroit. When he had saved $7,000 he returned to Poland. Arriving at Zagainiki late at night he inquired of the village policeman the location of his parents' home. He was admitted to the house without being recognized and demanded a bed for the night. It was noted the visitor had money and he was murdered in his sleep.

The police, on hearing of no further news of the stranger, became suspicious and, upon investigation, discovered his body in the cellar of the house. When the parents learned of the identity of the victim they both became insane.

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

Fumble!

Drum Major Ross is a real reason why the army band stationed at Washington, D. C., is noted for its fire, verve and dash. In the old army, when the war began, Ross was known from the Islands to Alaska as the most graceful dancer among the enlisted men. Moreover, being tall, spare, broad shouldered, he looked the part of the champion cake-walking drum major of them all.

His friends of more than six hitches remember that Ross dropped his baton once—and that was years ago, in a parade at the Presidio, San Francisco. The story is that, after a night of general celebration the champion drum major lost his stick on a twirl and that it plunged deep into the bass horn of one of the bandsmen behind.

There is one other occasion, a more recent one and known to his more recent friends, when Ross dropped the stick deliberately. This last fumble attracted proper attention to the troops Ross was leading. Here's how it happened:

All regiments in Chickamauga during a war training period were ordered to pass in review before the commanding officer of the camp. The general and his party stationed themselves in front of the Brotherton house, noted as a Civil war landmark, on one of the smooth, hard roads Chickamauga knew as "pikes."

Ross led the band and Fifty-fourth Infantry, Sixth division, toward the reviewing stand. The commanding general, he noted, was paying scant attention to the troops headed by the army's champion drum major.

Ten paces away from the general Ross twirled his baton, dropped it deliberately on the hard surface road. When it bounced, he caught the baton high in air without losing stride, saluting magnificently as he led the Fifty-fourth past a general who was bored no longer.

Victim of "Ol' Debbil Sea"

District of Columbia troops of the hard fighting Forty-second division (Rainbow), are fond of relating an incident which occurred while they were on the way to France aboard the Covington, a transport boat which later was sunk by the Germans during a return voyage to America.

Just as with other troops who listened to the "You can't stand here, soldier" of the high seas, men of the Rainbow were required to stand by in "abandon ship" drills at least twice a day, at odd hours.

At such times, the soldiers must appear at their allotted stations on deck with the regulation "full pack" as described in army regulations.

Private Henry Buffington, one of those typically fine fighting men, whose home was in an outlying section of Oklahoma, was caught at a disadvantage one day when the alarm sounded. Hurrying frantically, he appeared at his station minus a hat.

All the other soldiers were dressed properly so Buffington was singled out at once by Major Bryson, a stern disciplinarian. In his best military manner, the Major demanded:

"Private Buffington, where is your hat?"

Instantly, the soldier spun around, clicked his heels snappily together, raised his hand smartly in salute and replied:

"Sir, I'm sorry, but it blowed off into the crick."

The First Outfit Across

Base Hospital No. 4, the first unit of the United States army to participate actively in the World war, sailed from New York on the S. S. Orunda May 7, 1917, and arrived at Liverpool ten days later. On May 18 the members of this outfit were taken to Buckingham palace where they were welcomed by King George, who said:

"It is with the utmost pleasure and satisfaction that the queen and I welcome you here today. We greet you as the first detachment of the American army which has landed on our shores since your great republic resolved to join in the world-wide struggle for the ideals of civilization. We deeply appreciate this prompt and generous response to our needs. It is characteristic of the humanity and chivalry which has ever been evinced by the American nation that the first assistance rendered to the Allies is in connection with the profession of healing and the work of mercy."

Base Hospital No. 4, one of the original six base hospitals sent to Europe for duty with the British, was organized at Cleveland, Ohio, and remained with the British Expeditionary Force in France during its entire overseas existence, operating as No. 9 General Hospital, B. E. F. It ceased functioning about March 1, 1919, sailed from Europe on the S. S. Agamemnon on March 31, arriving in the United States on April 7, 1919, and was demobilized soon afterwards.

What Is a Book?

A series of little printed signs—essentially only that. It is for the reader to supply himself the forms and colors and sentiments to which these signs correspond. It will depend on him whether the book be dull or brilliant, hot with passion or cold as ice.—Anatole France.

Give 'Em the Gate

By GENEVRA COOK

(Copyright.)

MISS MATTIE FARR celebrated her thirty-eighth birthday by purchasing a shiny brass padlock for the new shiny black gate. With curved red lips set in the firm line of duty, her soft, appealing brown eyes tense with responsibility, she walked firmly across the reading room of the University library, down the dim hallway, and began to mount the stairs leading to the quiet alcove. Her cheeks, usually as delicately pink and white as apple blossoms in spring, were flushed with excitement to a deep rose. On her smooth white forehead appeared a very determined, very competent frown. Miss Mattie Farr, librarian, was looking at the gate.

Halfway up the stairs it stood, new and black and uncompromising, blocking the way to the dim, cozy little alcove above. Down these stairs for nearly four college generations, Miss Mattie Farr had watched couples come, smiling into each other's eyes; had watched them touch hands with a little catch of the breath; had watched them pass, unconscious of her disapproving gaze, seeing nothing but each other, toward the door.

Silly, what they could see in an evening spent in the library, sitting in a tiny alcove lined with musty books. The first two she had watched come down from that solitude, eighteen years ago, had been Tom Weaver and Anna Merton. And last week—the first week of college this year—when she had heard laughing and voices, and had mounted the stairs quickly, she had found little Annette Weaver, now a freshman, sitting on the table, teaching a new song to a tall senior with curly hair.

It was then that Miss Mattie, grim determination in her face, had decided to put an end to the whole business, and purchase the gate. And now all that remained was to lock it, and an end to foolishness. And to even worse than foolishness. For as Annette and her senior had come down the stairs, the horrified librarian had most certainly seen two shadows merge a breathless moment into one!

Having snapped the padlock with an indignant and scandalized click, Miss Mattie Farr turned to find herself looking into the gray eyes of Prof. William Weaver. Understanding eyes, they were, with something quizzical twinkling in them, as he said, "Good evening, Miss Farr. I see you're 'giving 'em the gate'!"

"Well, my only regret is that I didn't do it years ago. It's strange to me what they see in it, sitting on a table or a folding chair, surrounded by those old bound volumes of the 'Annals of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences or the Psychological Review.' They must be crazy!"

Miss Mattie looked up at Professor Weaver for his confirmation. His head bent ever so gently over hers. Tom Weaver's older brother, slim, distinguished bachelor, was looking down at her with a strange new expression in his gray eyes. Miss Mattie looked away quickly, conscious of a slow surge of pink rising upon her cheeks.

"I've often wondered just what's up there, anyway," he said, after a moment. "Do you—could I—I mean, would you show it to me?"

With a caught breath, Miss Mattie unlocked the gate, and they went up the stairs together.

It was the same old alcove that Miss Mattie had rearranged and dusted and unwillingly chaperoned for the past eighteen years. Yet there was something different about it today. There was an intimacy about the two folding chairs which faced each other across the little table. There was something a little mysterious and thrilling about the seclusion of it. There was something breath-taking about sitting there, talking about almost anything or almost nothing, and looking into the gray eyes of Prof. William Weaver.

It was nearly an hour later that Miss Mattie remembered that she ought to be at the desk. When she came to close the gate, William (he had asked her to call him William, as she used to do in the days when they had gone to school together, before he went away) closed it for her, and gently snapped the lock.

At the foot of the stairs they encountered Annette Weaver and the senior with curly hair.

"You've put up a gate!" cried the senior with astonishment.

"Hello, Uncle Bill," said Annette. "Why," her voice rose in quick dismay. "The gate's locked!"

The senior looked confidently at Miss Mattie. "Oh, please, Miss Farr, won't you give us the key?"

The habit of disapproval wavered about Miss Mattie's lips, though her eyes were wide with a new wonder.

"I'm sorry," she began, "but—"

Just then, in the dusk of the hallway, she felt William's hand brush hers.

"Oh, yes," said Miss Mattie, tremulously, "I've give you the key. I'll—I'll give you the whole gate!"

If Annette and her senior, happily climbing toward the alcove, had looked backward toward the foot of the stairs, they would most certainly have seen two shadows merge for a breathless moment into one.

Change in Membership of Congressional Body

Congress does not necessarily have to pass a new reapportionment law before the changes in the membership of the house, based on the 1930 census, take effect. Unless that body enacts a new reapportionment law before March 4 next, the report of the bureau of the census, as ascertained by the method used in the last preceding reapportionment, will become effective as applied to the Seventy-third congress, to be elected in 1932, and to succeeding congresses, or until congress does enact a new law. This gives several states new members to the total of 27 and takes a corresponding number away from other states. A fight may be made to increase the total membership of the house so that no state will have its present membership decreased.—Washington Star.

THE LAXATIVE WITH HIGHEST ENDORSEMENT

When you get up headachy, sluggish, weak, half-sick, here's how to feel yourself again in a jiffy.

Take a little Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water—or lemonade. Taken in lemonade, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia acts like citrate of magnesia. As a mild, safe, pleasant laxative, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia has the highest medical endorsement.

Castoria . . . for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Talk About the Weather

The old ground hog did not see his shadow on Monday as the skies were overcast and a heavy fog hung around all day. We are glad that the weather man was with us for the occasion and if all legends hold true to form as so many old timers claim they do then we have spent one of the warmest winters in our 27 years of staying in this part of the country.

Some even say it has been the best in 50 years, which we believe is some record to shoot at. The past week we have been watching our little snow trickling in small streams down the roadside and have been thinking about the money we have saved by not going to California this summer.

U. Farm Short Course

Marshall county was represented at the recent Farmers' and Homemakers' Short Course, at University Farm, St. Paul, by the persons named below. Farmers' and Homemakers' Week, held in January every year, is the largest short course of the fourteen which are held annually at Univesity Farm. It brings together more than 2,000 farmers and homemakers from various parts of the state for study, for meetings of state-wide organizations, such as the Minnesota Crop Improvement Association, the Minnesota Livestock Breeders' Association, and the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, and their affiliated organizations, and for entertainment. Large numbers attend the course year after year as a means of keeping in touch with the latest developments in farming and homemaking.

Those who attended from this county were: Frank Kurz and Fred Kurz of Warren; F. A. Green of Stephen; Leslie Shaver of Holt.

BULLETIN

Governor Floyd B. Olson, in a special statement to the State Wide Association Opposed to Sales Taxes, placed himself definitely on record against the adoption of a sales tax in Minnesota. The statement recently released is as follows:

"I am defininitely opposed to a sales tax on the ground that it is not only a nuisance, but discriminates against the man least able to pay it. It has not been successful in any of the communities where it has been applied and we have no reason for assuming that it will be successful here."

Extensive preparations are being made at Crookston for the twenty-first annual Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter shows to be held February 9-13. A. A. Dowel superintendent of the Northwest School and president of the Winter Shows association, announces that the event will combine exhibits of livestock, poultry, farm crops and industrial products with separate day meetings for farmers, homemakers, and 4-H club members.

Each evening, all groups will come together in mass meetings for entertainment and to hear timely talks by speakers of national prominence. The last evening meeting will feature the tenth annual festival chorus of the Northwestern Minnesota Singers' association, composed of 160 male voices from 14 unit choruses.

Contests in the judging of livestock and crops will be outstanding features of the educational program. Teams from three states and Canada will compete for numerous trophies and cash prices. A big event for the last day of the week will be the final spelldown for the champion rural school spellers from 13 northwestern counties.

Solons Discuss Farm Relief

Minnesota's legislators are showing a keen realization of the problems of agriculture and are hard at work on laws that will be of benefit to the rural districts, according to J. S. Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Minnesota Farm Bureau. Among bills already thrown into the hopper, in which the Farm Bureau is interested, are laws providing for a state income tax, indemnity bill for losses of animals or poultry killed by dogs, and a certain storage act.

The income tax bill provides for submission to the voters of a constitutional amendment that would permit a graduated tax on incomes, at least one-half the to go to the local school districts, the remainder to be used to reduce the state tax on property.

The indemnity fund bill provides for the licensing of dogs, money from the licenses to be placed in a fund to reimbursed owners of animals and poultry that are killed by dogs, and the grain storage act would provide for a system of storing grain on the farm, under bond, that would permit the owner to borrow money on such stored grain.

Wood Wanted!

Sealed bids will be received until 5 o'clock p. m., Feb. 7th for the delivery of three to four cords of dry poplar wood into the basement of the postoffice at Holt, Minn. The wood is to be split once and to be sawed into stove lengths.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, February 13, 1931. Volume 20; Number 42.

Highway Bids Let

Bids on six paving projects, totaling 76.4 miles, will be received by the Minnesota Highway department March 3, 1931, Commissioner C. M. Babcock announces. These projects will absorb the greater part of the $2,250,000 alloted to Minnesota from the $80,000,000 appropriated by Congress for special highway construction to relieve unemployment. Work will start as soon as weather permits and must be completed before Sept. 1, if the state is to draw the special federal aid.

Bids will also be received the same date on 64.3 miles of grading and eighteen bridges, to be financed with regular federal aid and currant motor vehicle and gas taxes. The contracts to be let March 3, with contracts previously let, will make a total of 262 miles of paving and 296.8 miles of grading. Some additional grading and bridge jobs will be let from time to time, but very little additional paving will be let this year unless additional funds are made available.

The department is making every possible effort to get as much work under contract as our known funds permit, so that as many men as possible can be employed early in the spring.

They are also trying, as far as possible, to distribute the work as widely as possible in all sections of the state.

While paving in this climate cannot start until May 1, most grading jobs can start April 1 and some of them, where shovels can be used in deep cuts, may be started earlier. We hope the contractors will start hiring their men and getting their matereals and equipment ready soon after the contracts are let.

This will provide work for some men immediately, and even those who have a promise of a job later in the spring will be in better position than those who have no job in sight.

The big grading job to be done here is the 11.9 mile project from Holt to Thief River Falls. This new highway will shorten the distance between these two points 0.7 mile, and eliminate two grade crossings and two real sharp turns. When this work is finished, we will have over forty miles of new No. 32 highway going through this district.

County Financial Statement

We are this week publishing the annual financial statement of Marshall County for the year 19 0. Keep your copy of the supplement for future reference and comparison.

Mrs. Elmer J. Pearson

Funeral services were conducted here on Saturday afternoon from the home and the Nazareth Lutheran church for Evelyn Helen Cordelia, wife of Elmer J. Peason of Minot, North Dakota. Mrs. Pearson died at a hospital in that city on February 4th at 8 o'clock in the morning from Embolism ten days after an operation for appendicitis.

Evelyn Helen Cordelia Pearson was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge of this place. She was born at Holt on October 2d 1900. From her parents she received a great deal of parental consideration which were fulfilled in her home environment. Materially, they gave her a good home; they gave her a father and mothers loving care; they gave her a wholesome education.

Spiritually, she was brought into contact with the church by being baptized during infancy by Rev. Leutman and confirmed by Rev. M. B. Ordahl in 1914.

Since her birth Holt has to a great extent been her home thus becoming a familiar and welcome figure in our community life. Many of us missed her presence when she left the community for the first time and obtained work in Fargo. After spending three years of her short life in Fargo she however returned to Holt. Again did she become familiar to all of us.

On the 25th day of August in 1928 she was united in marriage with Elmer J. Pearson of Minot, No. Dak. Thus she again left the community but time and again she returned to visit the parents of her youth.

She was very interested in music and singing, which was her greatest pleasure in life. She was a true loving wife and her new home was a happy one whom all enjoyed that knew her there.

Their union was short lived it is true but, we are sure that her character, her companionship has given the husband who mourns her loss a beautiful memory. A beautiful memory he would not wish to part from.

The Male Quartet sang Rock of Ages, When The Day Is Over, Softely The Day Is Fading, Jesus Lover of My Soul and Whispering Hope, which was her most favorite hymn.

Rev. Redal spoke beautiful words of comfort.

Besides her husband she leaves her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge who are experiencing the loss of one they loved so well.

The brothers and sisters who are left to mourn her loss are: Mrs. O. M. Mickelson of York, No. Dak., Mrs. A. L. Carlson of Crookston, Lucy Wegge of Larimore, No. Dak., Irene Wegge of Fargo, Raymond Wegge of Larimore, No. Dak., and Edgar and Dennis Wegge at home, all of whom were present at the funeral.

Out of town relatives who attended the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Herman Ohm of Thief River Falls, Fred Ohm of Larimore, No. Dak., Reinhart Ohm of Crookston, Bernard Ohm and children of Goodridge, A. L. Carlson of Crookston, Mrs. Otto Holt and son Clayton of Alvarado, Emil, Albert, and Swan Pearson of Argyle, Mrs. Albert Larson of Oslo, and a host of friends who more than filled the capacity of the church.

The pall bearers were: A. L. Carlson, Arthur Conklin, Anton Peterson, Theodor Ness, Herman Peterson and Leonard Larson.

The funeral arrangement were handled by the undertaking department of the Carlson Mercantile Company.

Interment was made in Holt cemetery.

Annual Creamery Meeting

The Stockholders of the Farmers Cooperative Creamery Co., held their twenty-fifth annual meeting in the Community Hall here Wednesday afternoon. It was a real peppy and interesting meeting with one of the largest audiences they have had in years.

With Louis Wegge, president of the board presiding, the stockholders approved the annual report of T. B. Folden, secretary of the company.

Several matters of important business were discussed by the board of director and the stockholders, the main issue being that the creamery will this year cut out paying cash to their patrons and thus eliminate a lot of bookwork and check-writing which has in the past meant a big expense to the creamery and a loss of so many dollars and cents to the patrons who took pay for their cream that way.

The board has, in place of paying cash, revised their paying plan and will now put the cash and monthly patrons on an equal basis. Those whom have been used to taking cash can under the new plan draw advance checks. You get the first one free and the next two will cost five cents each with your final monthly check also being free.

This was done to eliminate the monthly patron from drawing up close on his account by advance checks as was the practice of some and, yet, get the benefit of the monthly settlement while the cash patron lost two cents a pound on his butterfat by taking the actual cash check.

The board also decided to pay twice a month with the last check as final settlement.

B. O. Norby, manager of the Land O' Lakes poultry plant at Thief River Falls gave an interesting talk on cooperative marketing and also outlined a lot of other food plans for the farmers to follow out the coming year.

R. J. Lund of Thief River who audited the books and made out the annual statement for the creamery, was at the meeting and explained the statement in detail to the stockholders.

According to the secretary's report the local creamery did a business of $97,583.52 and the cost of this was $88,[illegible]24.1[illegible]. This left only $9,204.52, which was the total operating expense; and $54.85 was the net gain in operation for the year.

The sales were almost twenty-four thousand dollars less this year than they were a year ago.

At the present time the local creamery has no debts; it has a full line-up of good standard modern machinery and equipment; it also has a surplus of over $14,000 and a host of loyal patrons and a very promising future.

John Augustine and Olaus Rodahl were re-elected to serve on the board of directors.

Who's looney now?

What should be done about it?

What will be the ultimate effect upon our little communities like Middle River?

Why not enforce the law limiting taxation for schools?

The Creamery Association must pay a personal property tax for 1930 of $321.98 compared with $99.01 for 1929.

If the real property tax is also increased in proportion something will happen.

The neighboring Creamery Associations have the following personal property taxes for 1930.

Holt, $253.55
Alma, $16.68
Argyle, $95.33
Gatzke, not listed
Warren, $70.60
Viking, $9.26
Alvarado, $43.03
Newfolden, $90.16

Compare our bank taxes also with that of other banks. Can business stand this tax? To pass it on to the farmers who are in straits themselves will not better conditions. Man can not live by education alone.

E. M. Evans.

Editors Note:

We clipped the above article from the Middle River Record because we find that the same thing is wrong here as well as there. Don't worry as the tax situation in some of these school districts will soon have to undergo some drastic revisions or else the Crows are going to find very little to eat here, for the farmer as well as the businessman must leave when the tax burden gets too heavy for them to carry.

We admit that this is a sort of handicap for us all to struggle with, but you can all do a lot by patronizing your local institutions who are sticking with you and giving you a one hundred per cent of service under these circumstances. Remember this! That when you spend your money outside of your own community you are helping with the digging of your own grave.

Idea Worked!

Wise mothers find the things that keep children contented, well, happy. Most of them have found they can depend on one thing to restore a youngster's good nature when he's cross, fretful, upset.

The experience of Mrs. Wm. Charleston, 903 Gilmore Ave., Kansas City, Kans., is typical. She says: "I have used California Fig Syrup with Annie and Billy all their lives. Whenever they're constipated or billous it has them comfortable, happy, in a jiffy. Their wonderful condition proves my idea works."

Physicians endorse the use of pure vegetable California Fig Syrup when bad breath, coated tongue, dullness, feverishness, listlessness, etc., show a child's bowels need help. Weak stomach and bowels are toned by it; a child's appetite and digestion are improved.

The genuine always bears the name California for your protection.

DRAW them out with a "counter-irritant." Distressing muscular lumbago, soreness and stiffness—generally respond pleasantly to good old Musterole. Doctors call it a "counter-irritant," because it gets action and is not just a salve. Musterole helps bring soreness and pain to the surface, and thus gives natural relief. You can feel how its warming action penetrates and stimulates blood circulation. But do not stop with one application. Apply this soothing, cooling, healing ointment generously to the affected area once every hour for five hours. Used by millions for over 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses.

All that remains to be done on the $3,000,000 safety valve is the completion of side levees from the spillway to the river. This interesting airview shows the expanse of concrete.

Stool Pigeon Is Put on Spot

New York Gangsters Turn Trick That Doesn't Excite Police Much.

New York.—To wine and dine a young man, particularly a youth who fancies himself and his reputation as a "tough guy," and then to pick out a nice hot spot for him and fill him full of lead, while he is standing on it is nothing new in the realm of gangland murders.

So the police of New York and of New Jersey are not working any too hard at the task which confronts them in so far as the task concerns discovery of the murderer of Cheeks Luciano, whose parents christened him Nicholas. Should it turn out, however, as it may, that the demise of Luciano is in some way connected with one or two of his past offenses, or with the notable difference of opinion between him and Bum Rodgers, then possibly they might be willing to work a little harder.

Rodgers in "Solitary Stir."

It is well-known police history, in those places where such history is really recorded—and that is not in the record books or files of any department, but rather in the memory of detectives—that back in 1926 somebody told the New York police where they could find that same Bum Rodgers. They found him, too. And since then Bum, who carried the reputation for being just about as tough a general crook as ever operated in and around the city, has been in solitary "stir" in New York's "Siberia," or Dannemora prison.

The Bum, as they say, faces life, if he lives that long. He is not, so say the grapevine reports, standing his imprisonment well.

It is whispered that Bum Rodgers, who was all tyrant when he was back of a revolver with its muzzle pointing toward some one else, has become fed up with his 10 or 12 feet of exercise pen, his days upon days of being alone and his inability to see or do anything without a guard watching him.

Revenge for Rodgers?

If he is in that frame of mind, and word of some such condition has reached the police, he most certainly can't be terribly enthusiastic when he thinks of the events which put him where he is. And outstanding among such events is the fact that some one told the police where he could be found.

Cheeks Luciano is dead. His murderers poured 21 shots into his body in the Carinite Social and Athletic club over in Manhattan recently. It was, in a manner of speaking, as thorough a killing as New York has experienced in years. Can it be that the "death party," because that seems to have been exactly what attracted Luciano to the speakeasy where he wasn't known, was arranged as something of a retaliation because some one told the police back in 1926 where Bum Rodgers could be found?

There are some things to support such a theory, not the least being the fact that even a convict in solitary confinement can have an exceedingly long arm if he is plotting revenge.

Deer are also reported to be doing considerable damage to young trees in this Pike's Peak region, nibbling off terminal buds.

Church Weddings Losing Popularity in London

London.—Church marriages are losing in popularity in England, according to latest figures of the registrar general.

In five years, religious ceremonies have declined 19 per 1,000 and the number of civil marriages has increased proportionately. In London one marriage in every three is contracted outside the church.

Northern brides evidently still like the church, for in Lanchashire and Cheshire only one marriage in six is purely civil. There was a total of 42,316 marriages in London last year; 27,601 of them were religious.

Most of the offenders were generous in dividing the spoils with their victims, the probation officer said.

BIG BLUE-WHITE DIAMOND FOUND BY FIELD WORKER

Poor Brazilian, Ignorant of Value, Disposes of Gem for Less Than $10,000.

Rio de Janeiro.—A magnificent blue-white diamond weighing 51 carats has been found accidentally by a poor field worker near the village of Balisa, State of Goyaz, who, ignorant of its value, sold it for less than $10,000 to some wealthy farmers of the Aragunya river diamond district. The stone later was resold to a diamond merchant here, its price not being disclosed. It was cut in two sizes, the largest one weighing 20 carats, the small 10 carats.

Since the first diamonds were discovered in 1725, near the present city of Diamantina, Brazilian mines have yielded numerous matchless stones. It was the discovery of diamonds and of other precious minerals, in Brazil, that induced the King of Portugal to raise Brazil to the rank of viceroyship, a form of government that lasted until it became a kingdom in 1815. Up to that time the Portuguese monarchs had paid little attention to their South American colony, thinking it had no mineral wealth whatever, all their colonizing effort being devoted to the possessions they had in India at the time.

The marvelous crown stone of Portugal, known as the Braganza, also was discovered in Brazil, on the slopes of the Itambe mountains, state of Minas Geraes. It has the fabulous weight of 1,680 carats. The famous 'Star of the South," which weighs 125½ carats and which belongs to the Gaekwar of Baroda, was discovered in the Bagagem diamond district, and weighed 255½ carats before cutting. It is valued at more than $100,000.

Among the most important recent discoveries, the matchless pink diamond, "Southern Cross," stands out. The purchasers of this stone, a Rio de Janeiro firm, say it is the largest pink diamond in the world. It was found July, 1929, in the Abaete river diamond district, Minas Geraes, and weighs 118 carats, when cut it will weigh more than 20 carats.

Mosquito Gives Work to Idle on Cape Cod

Boston.—Cape Cod's mosquito, which keeps thousands of persons actively employed all through the summer months, will keep 100 or more men busy during this winter.

Thus the mosquito, which has never relieved anything—except monotony, perhaps—before, is serving to relieve unemployment in times when relieving unemployment is equivalent to a war-time contribution to the government's coffers.

The Department of Agriculture of Massachusetts reveals this latest development in the mosquito's history, in a bulletin reviewing the progress made thus far in the campaign to eliminate mosquitoes from the Cape by drainage of their breeding places.

This Woman In 4 Weeks Lost 17 Pounds of Fat

Here's a letter written October 21, 1929, by Mrs. Fred Barringer of Lewistown, Montana, that ought to be read by every overweight woman in America.

Gentlemen: I started taking Kruschen every morning as directed as I was very much overweight and wanted to reduce.

I had tried going on a diet but would get so hungry that my diet would not last long, so I decided to give "Kruschen Salts" a fair trial. The day I started to take them I weighed 256 lbs. and at present, which has been just four weeks, I weigh 239 lbs. And I must say, I feel better in every way, besides looking much better.

May all large people, both men and women, who want to reduce in an easy way, give Kruschen Salts a fair trial. I am sure it will convince anyone.

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts four weeks costs but 85c at any drugstore in America. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning. To help reduce swiftly cut out pastry and fatty meats and go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar.

The Kruschen way is the safe way to reduce—Try one bottle and if not joyfully satisfied—money back.—Adv.

Picturesque Spots of "Holy City" Wiped Out

Clusters of old houses supporting one another, winding cobbled blind alleys and clothes lines represent the Isola Tiberina, a tiny island lying in the middle of the Tiber's blondish waters right below the Garibaldi bridge in Rome. In ancient times the island was held sacred to Aesculapius, to whom a temple was erected there. Today it is a favorite spot for artists and for those lovers of the city whose devotion is not limited to the imperial ruins. Now the city planners have threatened this area and the artistic population is seriously alarmed. Besides, veteran islanders are asking themselves whether posterity will thank the present authorities for substituting a modern construction for the decrepit buildings of Tiberina. On the site of the sacred temple there stands today the beautiful church of St. Bartholomew and nearby is a hospital attached to the church of San Giovanni di Dio. Picturesque Rome is rapidly disappearing before the enthusiasm of clearing squads, and the non-Babbitts are wondering if the demolition process is not beginning to be carried too far. However, demolitions carried out for the widening of such places as the Trajan markets and the theater of Marcellus, and also for the relief of traffic congestion, have been happily received by the entire populace.

"Apple of Discord"

According to Greek mythology, the Apple of Discord was the golden fruit thrown among the Olympian divinities by the Goddess of Discord (Eris), bearing the inscription, "For the Fairest." Aphrodite (Venus), Hera (Juno), and Pallas (Minerva) became competitors for it, and its award to the first by Paris so inflamed the jealousy and hatred of Hera to all of the Trojan race (to which Paris belonged) that she did not cease her machinations till Troy was destroyed. This story is introduced in Tennyson's "Oenone."

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expressed fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Musia wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women." To Vladimir, Musia criticizes her brother Ilya's acceptance of the situation. She knows Vladimir is a member of an organization working for the downfall of the Bolsheviki. Vladimir kills a Bolshevik soldier and is arrested. A raiding party searches the Krassin home. Ilya is taken prisoner. Planning to save her son, Mrs. Krassin induces Musia to accompany her on a visit to Loris.

CHAPTER IX

Mrs. Krassin Presents a Petition

When Musia awakened the next morning it seemed for a moment as if the revolution and all that followed it had been a disturbed and horrible dream, and that she was now awakened to the old life, of which she had at times been a little weary, but which now she saw had been so beautiful. A night of profound slumber had done away with all her sense of danger and perplexity. She had been playing with Ilya and Vladimir and her girl friends on the great lawns overshadowed by tall trees at one of their noble old country seats, but there had been a fairy charm in the trees, the grass had had a tenderer green than she had ever noted, and the flowers were more splendid. And then she sickened at the realization that everything had been wrecked, and that day she was to go with her mother to a dreadful savage of a Bolshevik commissar to plead for her brother's life.

She rose and prayed before her ikon; to pray was better than to struggle. If only she were free of this struggle! Then she went out with her mother to make their supreme effort to plead for and ransom the head of their family, Ilya.

The year had grown a little older while she herself had aged, she thought, and while her mother had so plainly broken down. The trees were already clothed in the gold of the Russian autumnal forest, not the splendors of the oriental rug seen in America. Blue skies. Sunshine of gold filtering through the golden leaves. The landscape dreaming in a bluish haze deepening here and there into a transparent purple. In spite of everything the children played; the public gardens were full of them, sporting in the sand, filling the air with their shouts and laughter. The sight of them brought tears to Musia's eyes, the sight of their innocent happiness in the midst of the ever-present dread was so pathetic. She was very sensitive this morning.

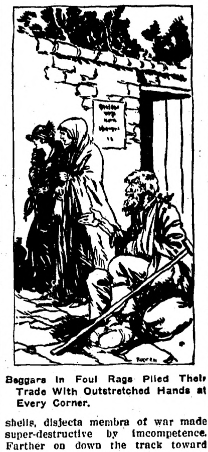
Her mother walked with all her old vigor, as if the streets belonged to her. It was the resolution of desperation, and the habit of authority. The two went along together in friendly silence as if they had settled everything between them so that words were a superfluity, Mrs. Krassin in her invariable black, Musia in an old-fashioned frock of quiet tone, which, she was aware, was very becoming. She was satisfied with the dress, for she was bred up in the tradition that a woman who is attractive is more likely to make a successful appeal than a dowdy one.

Shabby as they would have pronounced themselves, however, they were rather conspicuous for their good clothes on that street in Kazan that morning. Except for the children in the parks, very few people were out, and most of them were clothed in queer costumes purchased at the commission shops, at which places people in need brought anything they might possess for sale; or bought at the thieves' auction where loot was sold. Most of the men wore military shirts, but this fact meant nothing as to their having served in the army. Here and there were men and women in evening clothes. Many women wore white stockings and old-fashioned dresses; these were women of the intelligentsia families who had access to old trunks or those storage rooms called cladovia, in which these garments had been packed away for years and forgotten until this dire time of need.

All through this summer the filth had been accumulating in the historically dirty streets, the Bolshevist government apparently having given no thought to the danger of an epidemic. Most of the shops were closed. Many houses were locked up, seemingly, with the shutters tightly closed down. Beggars in foul rags plied their trade with outstretched hands at every corner. Shabby droshkies which look so quaint in pictures stood waiting for fares or rattled over the miserable pavements with their lean horses whipped to a gallop. Luxurious carriages which looked as if they had never been washed went by drawn by magnificent Orloff horses wrapped in clouds of dust, and filled with rough looking Bolshevik soldiers. At the bases of moving dust clouds which dwarfed those generated by the carriages, roared wildly speeding motor cars, violating every rule of both law and safety in their insane flight, their drivers not taking the trouble even to sound their horns.

It was a long walk to the railway station through the fine old boulevards, then out into the public streets; but they finally arrived. Musia was sorry to note that they were both thickly powdered with dust, and might make a not very favorable impression.

On most of the tracks in the yards stood military trains, strongly guarded by armed soldiers. On others were long strings of freight cars which had been converted into dwellings; a practice which accounts for the loss to the world of thousands of cars all over Russia. Much ammunition lay scattered about on the ground beside and between the tracks, mingled with broken rifles, parts of cannon, empty shells, disjecta membra of war made super-destructive by incompetence. Farther on down the track toward Loris' car were piles of ammunition covered with torn canvas. Finally, Loris' car itself, a huge vangon de luxe, standing on a cleared track with the way open for its instant departure, its engine under steam a few yards down the rails—a mechanical greyhound held in slip. An armed guard stood at the steps leading up into the car from the platform.



Beggars in Foul Rags Plied Their Trade With Outstretched Hands at Every Corner.

Mrs. Krassin moved forward to address the guard; but suddenly noticed that her daughter was no longer beside her; for Musia had shrunk back in a sudden access of fear. Her mother turned, took her by the arm and led her forward as one might lead a timid animal. The instincts of a lifetime caused her to adopt in speaking to the guard that tone of respect which the private individual uses in intercourse with one in an official position.

"I beg your pardon," said she in her smoothest tones. "Could I talk to Mr. Loris, in there?"

Then she caught herself. This fellow might have been a stableman in the employ of one of her friends—perhaps in her own service. Her amour propre was touched, and she bit her lip. The soldier looked both women over critically. Their rank was no longer anything in his young life.

"You will have to wait," said he, continuing his inspection; "Tovarisch Loris is very busy."

Divided Guilt Between Speaker and Listener

William W. Sewell, ranch manager in the West for the late President Roosevelt, and his guide on many a hunting trip in Maine, was the source of an interesting anecdote in New England in 1901.

The President, standing on the portico roof of the old Bangor house, in Bangor, Maine, called out: "Has anyone seen old Bill Sewell of Island Falls? If he's in the crowd, bring him up."

And Bill was brought up, while notables from all parts of New England were thrust aside.

"Bill, I'm glad to see you," greeted Teddy. "But I never expected a smart fellow like you would be wasting time listening to political speeches."

"And I never figured a smart feller like you would waste time makin' 'em," grinned Bill as the two shook hands.

Electrical "Load"

The "load" of electric machinery is the output of or demand upon a machine, usually measured either in terms of current delivered or of power delivered. A "load" may be light, heavy normal, full, half excessive, etc., according to the output of the machine at the time considered.

Secret of Politics

A Few Little Smiles

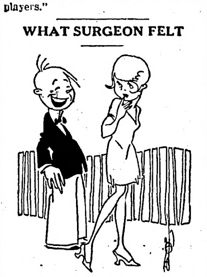
HER ULTIMATUM

"John!" said the missus.

"Yeah?" he grumbled.

"There is just one of two things that is going to happen. Either you are going to learn to win at poker or you are going to spend your evenings at home playing checkers with me. I'm tired of your money going to buy new hats for the wives of those other players."

WHAT SURGEON FELT



"So the famous surgeon felt your pulse and then recommended an operation."

"No, not my pulse, you idiot, my purse."

Give Three

Refrain From Singing

"Shall I sing for you, Mr. Flatman?" asked Miss Gushing, who was very proud of her voice.

"Have you a song with a refrain?" he asked.

"Yes, of course."

"Then, please refrain."

Method

Dave—Why are you giving your fiancee a cigarette case? Does she smoke?

Rod—I don't know, but she's just about to break off our engagement, and send my present back, and I can use it myself.

Scare for Burglar

Wife (at 2 a. m.)—Wake up, John, wake up! There's a burglar in the next room.

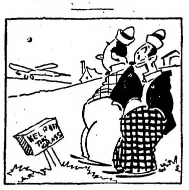
Husband (sleepily)—Well, I've no revolver. You go in and look daggers at him.

No Time for Statistics

Wag—Next to a beautiful girl, what do you think is the most interesting thing in the world?

Nug—When I'm next to a beautiful girl I'm not thinking about statistics.

UNDER A CLOUD



"They are suspecting that that aviator is claiming records that are crooked."

"Oh, it's not the first time he's been under a cloud."

Ode to Edison

Hush, little goldenrod,
Don't you cry—
You'll be a b'loon tire
By and by.

Little Defects

"Now that we are married, perhaps I might venture to point out a few of your little defects."

"Don't bother, dear. I'm quite aware of them. Those little defects prevented me from getting a much better man than you are."

A Help in That Case

Hornsby—Being big-headed never got a person anywhere.

Bell—Not unless it was a fellow who made a living by passing the hat.

Inherited

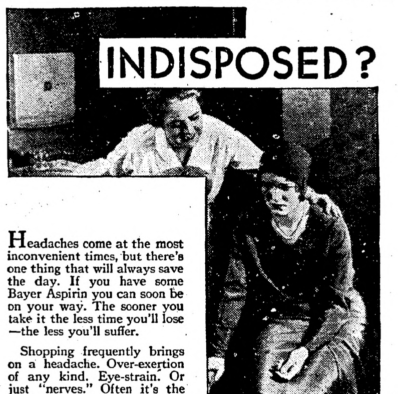
Jack—I'm from a curious family. My father has a wooden leg, two of my brothers have artificial arms, a sister has false teeth—

Clifford—And you seem to have come by your wooden head naturally, then.

Rash Enough

"If I turn him down, will he do anything rash?"

"He'll probably propose to another girl."



INDISPOSED?

Headaches come at the most inconvenient times, but there's one thing that will always save the day. If you have some Bayer Aspirin you can soon be on your way. The sooner you take it the less time you'll lose—the less you'll suffer.

Shopping frequently brings on a headache. Over-exertion of any kind. Eye-strain. Or just "nerves." Often it's the time of month. Regardless of the cause, you want relief. And you get relief when you take Bayer Aspirin. Take promptly! It will relieve the pain at any stage, but why wait until you are miserable? Bayer Aspirin can't harm you, because there is nothing harmful in it.

Remember this, when you're tempted to try some product that costs a few cents less!

New Tuberculosis Remedy

Tubercular Frenchmen no longer have to go to the mountains for treatment of their lungs. Doctor Arnold, a French physician who has made a 20-year study of tuberculosis, has recently completed the first "inhalatorium" for treatment of consumptives near Paris. Patients inhale specially treated air through tubes, eliminating the necessity for them to be exposed to the rarefied air of mountain tops in winning their way back to health, says Popular Science Monthly.

In Doctor Arnold's institution each patient sits in a small booth and breathes in health-giving drafts. The treated air has a cleaning action on their lungs and helps to heal lesions that have formed.

On the Make

P. Gaskell Blythe, well-known hotel man, was the honorary guest at a waiters' banquet in Chicago, and in the course of a brilliant after-dinner speech he said:

"Good waiters think only of service. Bad waiters think only of tips—whatever you say suggests tips to them.

"'Got any celery?' I said to a waiter at luncheon yesterday.

"He looked sad and shook his head.

"'Oh, no, indeed, sir,' he said. 'Ye got to rely entirely on yer tips here.'"

Deadly Virtues

There are certain virtues which, unless checked by a strong sense of genuine values, become deadly.—Woman's Home Companion.

A chef who is a genius, can lift even scrambled eggs out of their ordinary tastelessness.

First Stockings

There is a theory, strengthened by documentary evidence, that the origin of the stocking is found in religious clothing.

In the First century of the Christian era the clergy used wrapping of some material to cover the leg. These bindings were called "udones" and were part of a priest's costume. We see in the Italian mosaics of the Eighth century that the popes and high dignitaries of the church have their legs bound with some material, which ended either above or below the knee, and was held by a cord similar to the garter, or by bands crossed in a symmetrical fashion up the leg.

Fretful DAYS Restless NIGHTS ...give child Castoria

FUSSY, fretful, can't sleep, won't eat.... It isn't always easy to find just where the trouble is with a young child. It may be a stomach upset; it may be sluggish bowels.

But when little tongues are coated and there is even a slight suspicion of bad breath—it's time for Castoria!

Castoria, you know, is a pure vegetable preparation especially made for babies and children. When Baby cries with colic or is fretful because of constipation, Castoria brings quick comfort, and, with relief from pain, soothes him to restful sleep. For older children—up through all the school years, Castoria is equally effective in helping to right irregularities. Just give it in larger doses. What a comfort Castoria is to mothers!

Spelling Contest

Gladys Mickelson of school district 55, at Stephen is Marshall county's champion speller. She remained standing after more than thirty others had been sent to their seats in the county spelling match held at Warren last Friday. Clairie Docken of district 34, at Viking was second and Olga Brown of district 115 at Grygla was awarded third place. The judges were: Edith Brett, Warren, Louise Besancon of Middle River, and Myrtle Styrlund of Radium. The contest was conducted by Nels M. Engen, County Supt. of Schools and Miss Hattie E. Anderson, Assistant County Supt. of Schools who also awarded the prizes.

Teachers and friends of the contestants from all parts of the county attended.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to the many friends for the kindness and help shown us in our hour of sorrow, also for the beautiful floral offerings and to Rev. Anderson for his words of comfort and to the choir. Your kindness will never be forgotten.

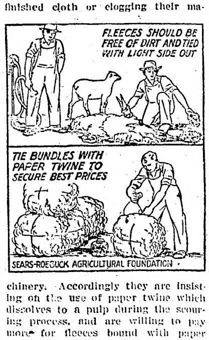
Interesting Facts for Wool Growers

Dating back almost to the time when mythological Jason gave the wool business its first great impetus through the capture of the Golden Fleece, there has been a constant division of opinion concerning certain practices in the wool and sheep industry. The recent survey of wool marketing conditions conducted by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation has brought to light many facts of interest to wool growers.

One of the most important of these is the attitude of the mills toward the tying of wool for shipment. It has been a common practice among sheep raisers to tie fleeces with binder twine or any other twine which came to hand. The mills have experienced considerable trouble on account of the fibers from such twine getting into the finished cloth or clogging their machinery. Accordingly they are insisting on the use of paper twine which dissolves to a pulp during the scouring process, and are willing to pay more for fleeces bound with paper twine. The less twine used the better it suits them. Fleeces should be free of chaff and dirt, and should always be tied with the bright side out.



FLEECES SHOULD BE FREE OF DIRT AND TIED WITH LIGHT SIDE OUT
TIE BUNDLES WITH PAPER TWINE TO SECURE BEST PRICES
SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

Shipping methods were also given considerable attention during the investigation and it was found that freight shipment is in all cases cheapest and most practical. Express shipment is far too expensive on account of heavy carrying charges. Lots of less than 100 pounds cannot be marketed economically.

Further results of the raw wool survey will be broadcast over the radio of the Foundation, and it is believed that these talks will be of great practical value to wool growers in this country.

School Notes

First and Second Grades

The Valentine Airplane has been completed.

The 1st and 2d grades have decorated the room with hatchets, log cabins, soldier boys, and patriotic little girls. We are also learning stories about the life of Abraham Lincoln and George Washington.

The grades have contributed to the room by bringing pictures of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and for Valentine's day,

Betty Lou pleasantly surprised the room by extending an invitation on Monday, to them to come to her home for a Valentine party on Thursday afternoon. They are all very delighted to go.

Third and Fourth Grades

Howard and Betty Lou Lorentson invited the 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th grades to a valentine party given on Thursday afternoon, at the Lorentson home. It started at 2 o'clock and lasted till 4. After playing many games a delicious lunch was served. Everyone had a real good time.

We are having our party and Vaventine box this afternoon. A Valentine play is also to be given.

Our 4th grade won the toothbrushing contest this last week.

The 3d and 4th grades are having a Vegetable race to find out which vegetable, that is good for them, is the most popular. They made a pledge to eat one vegetable that they don't like and don't eat now.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

We were presented with a large health ball, a reward for selling Christmas seals.

Glenn Carlson built a log cabin in connection with our study of Abraham Lincoln.

We are anxiously waiting for our Valentine party as our box is being filled to capacity.

Mrs. Lorentson visited here Friday and we enjoyed it very much as we are always glad to have visitors.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

"Old Man Flu" has raised cane with our attendance this week. The following were absent: Ruth Bottem, Lida Monson, and Helena Johnson.

The boys have completed their tie racks in Manual Training.

Our Valentine Party will be given on Friday afternoon.

High School

The Sophomores are giving a Valentine Party for the High School on Friday night.

The Biology class has just finished studying and dissecting the clam.

4-H Club To Meet

The 4-H Club will meet on Tuesday evening Feb. 17th at 8 o'clock in the schoolhouse. All members should be present, as we are going to decide whether or not we are going to have a Stunts Committee. A program will also be rendered.

TRUST NO BULL, ADVISES HOPPER

Handle Animal Firmly and Keep Him Subdued.

Any effort to make a pet of a bull is bound to be followed by trouble, says Prof. H. A. Hopper of the New York State College of Agriculture. Confidence in bulls is always misplaced; not one is safe.

According to Professor Hopper the young bull should be firmly handled from calfhood and should be taught to recognize man as his master. He should be halter broken and when about one year old a strong ring should be inserted in his nose. By keeping him in a well-built stall and using only strong, properly fitted ties he can be prevented from learning his tremendous strength. All bulls more than a year old should be regarded with suspicion and taught to know their place.

The horns of a bull may be removed at an early age or late if desired. With the young calf the use of caustic potash before the horns have started growing is the most humane method to follow. Some stockmen prefer to delay the removal until the bull has reached maturity, when the ordeal of removal and the loss of the horns will tend to "take the conceit out of him." While the dehorned bull is still dangerous, much would be gained if all bulls were dehorned early in life.

With proper arrangements of stall and yard, a dehorned bull handled by a staff attached to a ring in his nose should cause no trouble. However, much will depend on his early training and the courage of his caretaker.

Those who wish to know more about the feeding and care of the dairy bull may obtain a free bulletin on the subject by writing to the publications office in Roberts hall, College of Agriculture, Ithaca, New York, and asking for E-614.

Spring Freshening Cows Have Little Advantage

Although spring freshening cows have the advantage of starting their milking year under ideal feed conditions provided by an abundance of luxuriant, nutritious pasture, the cheapest and best of all feeds, such a favorable environment is short lived. A few weeks later the heat of summer is upon them. Good pasture is less abundant. Pressing work in the field does not permit the farmer to give his cows the attention they require. Flies add to the discomfort of the cows, their milkers and the calves. As a result, cows go down in production and stay down. No methods of feeding have yet been found which will bring them back to good production after they have once been permitted to go down. Furthermore, butterfat prices are generally lower in spring and summer than at any other time of the year.

Before Breeding, Heifers Should Be Carefully Fed

Up to the time that heifers are bred dairy animals should not be overfed. It is well to keep them in good growing condition, but too much fat is to be avoided. Excessive fitting at this time is apt to stunt growth by rushing maturity and producing a "pony" type of animal. After the heifer is bred, however, feeding can be much more liberal. There are then extra demands on the heifer and it is desirable that she have a good store of nutrients against the first lactation period. If these heifers are on really good pasture they are not suffering, although a little grain now will prove profitable later. Fall freshening heifers that are on poor pasture should be fed well, green feed if possible and certainly grain—three to five pounds per head daily.

Underfeeding Wipes Out Profits in Dairy Herd

Underfeeding, or feeding of an incomplete ration, keeps down or wipes out profits in many a dairy herd. One reader goes so far as to say that dairy cows are now better bred than fed; that starved purebreds are no better than starved scrubs. There is still room for improvement along both lines.

The point is, every dairy cow should be fed a complete ration, and as much of it as she will turn into profit. It is the wrong way to fed as little as the cow will get along on and still show a profit or just break even.

Cow testing records prove that liberal feeding is not an expense, but an investment.

HOW

SWINE ARE AFFECTED BY EXTREMES OF WEATHER.—The hog appears to have no more sense than many humans, when it comes to a question of coming in out of the rain, and as a result the losses from pneumonia and swine influenza are sometimes severe.

The common practice of letting pigs run wild and giving them little or no protection, under the impression that they don't mind the cold, is decidedly adverse to a prosperous year for the raiser.

The lack of hair makes the pig susceptible to cold and sudden changes in temperature, and particularly is this so when it is allowed to lie on wet ground.

The symptoms of the two diseases are somewhat similar to those of hog cholera, and have led to an erroneous belief many times that cholera was responsible for deaths that might have been prevented with a little shelter during bad weather.—Washington Post.

How Magnetic Oxide of Iron Became "Lodestone"

Magnets are substances which have the property of attracting iron, and the term magnetism is applied to the cause of this attraction and to the resulting phenomena. This property was known to the ancients. It exists in the highest degree in an ore of iron which is known in chemistry as the magnetic oxide of iron. This magnetic oxide of iron, or lodestone, as it is called, was first found in Magnesia, in Asia Minor, the name magnet being derived from the circumstance. The name lodestone, which is applied to this natural magnet, was given on account of its being used when suspended as a guiding or leading stone, from the old Saxon word, "laeden," to lead. Lodestone or magnetic oxide of iron, is very abundant in nature, especially in Sweden and Norway, where it is worked as an iron ore and furnishes the best quality of iron. It is also found in Canada.

How Selenium Is Employed

Solid bubbles of selenium, the strange element that transmits electricity when light shines on it, though at other times it offers great resistance to an electric current, can be blown with the aid of a glass tube, reports Charles E. S. Phillips, in Nature, a London publication. The selenium is melted, and then when the tube is dipped into it, withdrawn and blown through, a rather sausage-shaped bubble can be blown. A curious effect reported is that when two bubbles, even twenty-four hours old, are brought into contact, they seize violently together and cannot again be separated. The method, he says, is a convenient one of getting flakes of selenium for experimental purposes.

How Guns Dispelled Pests

Off the coast of Cornwall last summer porpoises were so numerous they played havoc with salmon and trout fishing. The fisheries department took the most unusual course of dispersing them by gunfire. The same sort of thing has now been happening in Palestine in the case of locusts. When this particular one of "Pharaoh's plagues" threatened to visit the country and the locusts were assembled in dense hordes for the purpose, a field company with a large number of "flame guns" attacked and routed the pests. It is, anyway, a relief to think that there can be other uses for guns than the destruction of humanity.—London Mail.

Electrons in Atom

Physicists of today state that there is evidence that all atoms known have in them a certain definite number of negative electrons and exactly the same number of positive electrons. For instance, the lead atom consists of a positive nucleus charge of 82 units about which 82 electrons revolve; zinc, a nucleus charge of 30 units with 30 revolving electrons; helium, a nucleus charge of 2 units with 2 revolving electrons; sulphur, a nucleus charge of 16 units with 16 revolving electrons; platinum, 78; gold, 79; radium, 88, etc.

Magnetic Poles

The geographical poles are the points at the imaginary ends of the earth's axis of rotation, lying 90 degrees north and south latitude. The magnetic poles are the points on the earth's surface where the lines of magnetic forces are vertical. They are the ends of the axis of the earth's magnetic polarity. The north magnetic pole is located in latitude 70 degrees north, longitude 97 degrees west, and the south magnetic pole in latitude 72 degrees south, longitude 153 degrees east.

Water Filtration Has Curbed Disease Spread

About 1887 it was announced by Percy Frankland and others that sand filtration removed nearly all the bacteria in water. Five years later came the outbreak of cholera in Hamburg, and a striking demonstration was afforded of protection through filtration. Hamburg and Altona, two cities on the Elbe river, both used the river as a source of water supply. Hamburg used unfiltered water; Altona filtered its supply. When cholera infection of the river water occurred, Altona escaped with only a few cases. Hamburg, on the other hand, had an enormous number.

Following the rapid advance of the science of bacteriology in the '80s and '90s, it was natural to consider the possibility of purifying drinking water by the addition of chemical disinfectants. The first systematic use of chlorine in water is credited to Houston and McGovern in England in 1904 and 1905. The present world-wide use of chlorine disinfectant of public water supplies, however, is due largely to the work of George A. Johnson, who, in 1908, used bleaching powder ("chloride of lime") for the purification of Jersey City's water supply.—New York Times.

Inventions That Would Make Deviser Wealthy

Among the 20 ways of making a million dollars, revealed by Roger W. Babson, economist, in the Forum are: (1) Pills for plants—condensed form of fertilizer, to do away with wasteful spreading. (2) A new gearless automobile which will use a rotary engine, go sidewise as well as forward and backward for convenience in parking. (3) A foolproof helicopter, to lift an airplane directly off the earth, enabling the aviator to light on city streets and building roofs. (4) Gliders for children. Diet of Lions

Lions in their native habits prey largely upon young antelopes, zebras, buffalos, giraffes and other vegetation-eating animals. For this reason it is often stated that the lion will not eat the flesh of carnivorous or flesh-eating creatures. The fact seems to be that lions will eat the flesh of any animal recently killed, such as animals left by hunters. Certainly lions in captivity are not particular about the kind of flesh they eat. There is also abundant proof that the king of beasts will occasionally attack and eat human beings. Dr. W. Reid Blair, in his book "In the Zoo," tells of two man-eating lions in Africa, which carried off 18 men employed in building the Uganda railway.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Small Potatoes

The late Haley Fiske of insurance fame said one evening in a Y. M. C. A. address in Brooklyn:

"It pays big business to be liberal. To save a dollar in a mean small way signifies the loss of hundreds of dollars in good will.

"Whenever a mean, small economy is proposed to me I tell the anecdote about the Scotchman who went into a barber shop and said:

"'Hoo much for a haircut?'
"'Forty cents, sir,' said the barber.
"'Hoo much for a shave?'
"'Twenty cents.'
"'Shave mah head.'"

Purifying Public Water

The first noteworthy movement in this country for the purification of a public water supply was made in 1866, according to the New York Health department, when St. Louis sent James P. Kirkwood to Europe to investigate the methods practiced there. On his return Kirkwood made an elaborate report that water engineers still regard as a classic. In 1872, about five years after Kirkwood's death, a plant was built at Poughkeepsie in accordance with his plans. This was the first practical attempt at purification of a municipal water supply in America.

Scottish Abbey Holds Relics of Robert Bruce

Subject to the fulfillment of certain conditions, the trustees of Professor Noel Paton handed over the following articles to the kirk-session of Dunfermline abbey: 1. A portion of the skeleton of King Robert the Bruce, namely, the metatarsal or bone of the great toe. 2. A small portion of the outer leaden shroud of King Robert the Bruce. 3. A small portion of the toile d'or in which the body of King Robert the Bruce was wrapped. 4. The remains of one of the iron nails which were found among the remains of the coffin in which the body reposed. 5. The remains of one of the six iron rings, or rather handles, which had been filled in with lead into the largest of two stones protecting the vault of the Bruce when first discovered on February 17, 1818. 6. Twelve fragments—white marble and calm stone—"believed to be portions of the magnificent monument of King Robert the Bruce at Dunfermline destroyed by the Lords of the Congregation." The relics are preserved in an oak glass-fronted cabinet placed alongside of the abbey pulpit erected immediately above the vault of the Bruce.—London Mail.

Washington Stirred Up Over Van Buren's Coach

Van Buren arrived in Washington toward the end of the second week of the session, it being traditional for the Vice President to absent himself until the senate committees had been appointed. On taking the chair on Monday, December 16, he made his first public utterance as the second officer of the land. It was short and one such as others before and after him have made; totally devoid of significance. It provoked no comment; but the coach he had brought over from England did. The adverse journals described it as an English coach of state—"a very splendid carriage, drawn by two beautiful blooded horses, their heads and tails full of a great deal more of intellect, passion, feeling and sublimity than their owner. . . . It is of a dark-olive hue, with ornaments elegantly disposed, shining as bright as burnished gold" and "far more superb than the equipages of royalty."—From "An Epoch and a Man" by Dennis Tilden Lynch.

Wide Use of Amulets

Amulets, writes Frank H. Vizetelly, editor of the New Standard dictionary, were used once not only for the protection of men and women, but also of cattle. The so-called Antonius medallions were very much in demand for this purpose, and were hung upon horses, asses, and oxen, for Antony of Padua had been the patron of the horse and the ass in his day. Cowbells, like bells hung upon infants, were intended originally to frighten away evil spirits, and their use in later times to help the herdsmen to trace the cattle or identify their beasts is a much later idea. Charms against charms also were worn.

Nothing New

The young son of an Indianapolis physician is intensely interested in moths. He reads everything that comes to hand concerning them. One day when his father saw him poring over a big volume in the library, he said:

"What are you reading, son?"

The son replied: "Oh, about moths, but they don't tell me anything I don't already know about them."

The interested parent asked: "Well, what is the name of your book," when son answered:

"What All Moth-ers Should Know."

Apparently a Highway Victim

Bobbie, aged four, had accompanied his mother on a visit to the home of an over-nice maiden great-aunt. Cautioned for days and days beforehand, he was careful about everything he said and did—until dinner time came. Then he became eager, for he was told that chicken was on the menu.

When this delectable fowl was served, and Bobbie observed that there were no "drum-sticks," but instead were shredded patties, he exclaimed:

"This chicken must have been run over!"

Growth of Sand Dunes

The sand dunes along the shores of lakes are formed by the wind. A stiff breeze blowing along the beach carries some sand with it. It meets some obstacle, a piece of driftwood or perhaps merely a tuft of grass. Some of the sand is deposited and a tiny dune is formed. More and more sand is added until a large mound is formed, sometimes rising to a height of 300 feet. The wind not only builds up dunes but tears them down, so that the sand dunes are constantly changing in form and position.

Dairy Notes

Provide warm, dry, clean stalls for fall-born calves.

Barley, oats, wheat and corn will not make up a balanced ration.

Gluten feed, gluten meal and bran are widely used in preparing the winter ration.

Feeding large amounts of cottonseed meal, even though it is low in price, is not advisable.

Cows like clover hay. Clover requires about 14 per cent digestible protein in the grain mixture.

Cows will eat mixed hay. Mixed hay requires about 16 per cent digestible protein in the grain mixture.

Time spent in cleaning and washing a separator will pay dividends. A dirty separator will not skim efficiently.

With a roughage very low in protein such as corn fodder, sudan, or timothy hay, feed equal parts ground corn, wheat bran and cottonseed oilmeal. Unless silage is fed, linseed oilmeal is preferable.

* * *

For the great majority under normal conditions, some combination of hays is usually available that falls between the two extremes. When the hay consists partly of clover, feed 400 pounds of ground corn, 200 pounds of wheat bran and 100 pounds of cottonseed meal.

Caves Valuable, Apart from Scenic Splendor

The limestone caves at Waimoto in New Zealand bring tourists from every part of the world to see the extraordinary beauties of the glow worm cavern with its myriad stars of phosphorescent fire. The Mendip caves of Somersetshire and the Peak cavern of Derbyshire, England, have thousands of visitors yearly, and so has the Mammoth cave of Kentucky. The Mammoth cave had quantities of saltpeter in it which were dug and carried away for making gunpowder. But many caves have a value apart from that of mere scenic splendor. In the bush country near Te Kuiti in Auckland a huge cavern in which is a wonderful deposit of alabaster has been recently discovered. Another cave called the Carlsbad cavern, discovered under the Guadalupe mountains, in New Mexico, has great beds of rock salt. This place is said to rival the Mammoth cavern for size, one chamber being half a mile long, four hundred feet wide and more than three hundred feet in height.

Design Long Followed

The ratio 1:1.618, said to be the mathematical basis for beauty, has been used in residential designs for 3,000 years. It was applied in building the pyramids, and is considered the ideal proportion for living rooms, window openings, glass lights in windows and so on. It is used by all designers in determining length in proportion to width.

This number, 1.618, is a puzzle. If you multiply it by itself, the result is 2.618. Multiply this by 1.618 and the result is 4.236. Is it coincidence that this last power of 1.618 is equal to the sum of the two preceding? A series of successive powers of this number carries out this same truth, any one power being equal to the sum of the two preceding.

Not Through

Billy, age five, was invited as a guest with his mother and father to take dinner at a hotel. He was greatly impressed with the service and was especially appreciative of the finger bowl. He had paused in the process of washing his fingers, and the alert waitress started to remove the bowl. This time, however, her attempt was halted, for Billy remonstrated in an unmistakable tone of command: "Don't take the washpan! I want to wash some more dirt off of my hands."

Film Takes Place of Book

An interesting feature of the effort to reform the Russian alphabet is the fact that it is to be accomplished largely by the use of the talking film instead of the spelling book. A very novel system has been worked out and trials that have been made of it seem to indicate that it will make the work of the student much more attractive and efficient. The difficulty of educational movements of this character is to get the older persons interested, but the film is said to accomplish this and great hopes are entertained that the change of language will be accomplished easily and quickly by the entire country.

Community Building

Here's Opportunity for Highway Associations

Secretary of Agriculture Hyde, in his annual report, reminds the country of a recent amendment to the federal highway act, which provides that the federal government may pay half the cost of planting trees along the highways. No state yet has taken advantage of this provision, although there is an increasing sentiment in favor of highway shelter and beautification from trees.

Official state co-operation in this plan necessarily will be slow, for the reason the state legislatures will need to act. While the cost is relatively small, there will be states with large obligations and limited revenues that may hesitate to meet at once the federal government's offer. Yet there are few expenditures, aside from those that are imperative, that would go so far in making the states attractive to their own people and to those who go on tour.

Regardless of what states may do, there is an immediate opportunity for the numerous highway associations. Such an association as that formed by the cities, towns and communities along highway 71, which already is committed to putting this highway in order, has on its program, at least tentatively, the planting of trees. Such an association, with comparatively small funds and with the allowance and co-operation of the government, could in a short time plant miles of intelligently selected shade trees. Once the owners of lands along the roads appreciate the importance of scenic attractiveness, there should be a considerable planting on their own account.—Kansas City Star.

Conditions That Make Small Town Desirable

The small city does not lack defenders, but they seldom come from the ranks of big business. When a railroad president declares that it is not size that counts, but livableness, he deserves to be listened to.

President Thomas Powell of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, in an article in the Nation's Business, lists these community requirements: Pure water, a complete sewer system, well-paved streets, good school, fair taxes, a good public library system, parks, and an "artistic spirit strong enough to keep them clean," a sensible building code, good churches.

"All these advantages," he thinks, "can be obtained more effectively in a small city than in a large one, mainly because there can be greater personal contact between the individual members of the community."

Beauty in Colored Shingles

In addition to the beautiful natural effects which can be obtained with shingles for the walls of a house, there are innumerable opportunities for rich color which creosote stains produce. These colors, unlike paint, allow the grain of the wood to show, and they give a surface which is almost ruglike in softness.

A combination of harmonious browns, tans, reddish browns and yellowish browns may be used on the same wall by using shingles which have been dipped into these different tones. This mixing of various shades is often overdone, but when good taste is used in the selection many beautiful results are possible.

Roadside Trees

Suitable tree planting along public highways, which greatly enhances their appearance and comfort, is most satisfactorily done by the community as a whole rather than by individuals, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Interest in country highways in the United States has increased rapidly during the last few years. The greater interest in rural roads is due largely to the growing automobile traffic, a large part of which is pleasure driving in which the most beautiful routes are naturally sought.

Saving the Trees

The contractor is usually made responsible for trees and shrubs on the property that it is desired to preserve. This is done by entering appropriate clauses into the general conditions of the contract, by which the contractor is required to box all trees, to avoid piling building materials and rubbish against them, and to preserve shrubs in any suitable manner.

Hail City Planner

We can see limitless possibilities for the city planner. We can see him, or her, bringing order out of chaos, making two beauty spots grow where not even one would grow before.—Exchange.

Financial Statement

—of—

MARSHALL COUNTY
STATE OF MINNESOTA

For the Fiscal Year Beginning January 1, 1930 and Ending December 31st, 1930.

Office of County Auditor,
MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA
Warren, Minnesota, January 5, 1931.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners,
Marshall County, Minnesota.

Gentlemen:

I herewith submit to you a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the county during the year 1930, also an itemized account of the warrants issued upon the County Treasurer during the said fiscal year, also a summary of the accounts collected for and turned over to each of the school districts, townships, city and villages, also a statement of the financial condition of Marshall County at the close of the past and beginning of the present year, including all debts and liabilities and the assets and means to discharge the same.

Respectfully submitted,

H. M. Hanson

County Auditor.

SIX CYLINDER SENTENCES

By DR. JOHN W. HOLLAND

- Whoever prays about his duties generally does them.
- The banker says: "If you want time to pass quickly, sign a note."
- Make more of what you have, and you cannot envy those who have more.
- Watch out for your groove, it may wear deep enough for your grave.
- Give the body its "three squares" and your soul three prayers a day.
- For fathers: The boy is not likely to break if his father unbends with him.

Naturally

Lord Chesterfield was commenting on one of the most recent of our international matrimonial matches.

"I think it's an outrage," declared Lady Astor. "The woman hasn't a single thing to recommend her but her money."

"In that case," smiled Chesterfield, "age will add interest to her charm."

Always Room for Hope

Grandpa—Just think! I was once a little baby like him and soon he'll be a man like me.

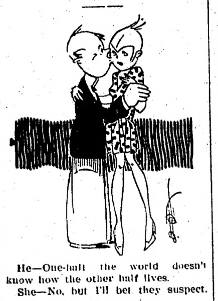
Proud Mother—Don't blight his beautiful childhood by making such gloomy predictions.

Not Forewarned

Mistress—Why did you leave your last place, Mary?

Maid—Because I did not know what this one was like.—Zurich Nebelspalter.

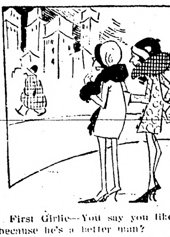
SUSPICION



He—One-half the world doesn't know how the other half lives.

She—No, but I'll bet they suspect.

NOT NECESSARILY BETTER



First Girlie—You say you like him because he's a better man?

Second Girlie—No—a petter man.

Country Highways Not Adapted to Speeding

An analysis of highway accidents by the department of motor vehicles of Connecticut appears to show that those in country sections are relatively more costly in loss of life and limb than are those in large cities. It was found that one death could be expected in every forty-one accidents on a country highway. The ratio of deaths to accidents in city streets was 1 to 75.

There is little mystery about this. A considerable proportion of accidents in towns is due to collisions when neither car may be going at great speed. Persons driving in a city naturally expect danger at street intersections and perhaps keep sharper lookout than do those bowling along an open highway. Speeding in a well-policed city is attended by greater risk of arrest than is the case on a rural highway.

Drivers from a city when touring through the country, says the New York Sun, will do well to remember, however, that driving recklessly there is foolish and dangerous, just as driving recklessly in town is foolish and dangerous. Although a clear, well-paved highway offers temptation to step on the gas, the chance of escaping unharmed from an accident is relatively less there than it is on a city boulevard.

Virginia Planning Tree Planting Along Roads

Plans for beautifying the highways of Virginia were discussed at a meeting called by Gov. Harry F. Byrd, at the request of the garden clubs of Virginia, and attended by many prominent women from various sections.

It was decided that the garden clubs would appoint a committee to co-operate with another committee to be appointed by Governor Byrd, and that these two bodies would formulate a program for preserving the trees and shrubs already growing along the state highways, and also for planting others. It was emphasized that the state will not be asked to pay for planting the trees.

William O'Byrne, extension forester at the Virginia polytechnic institute, suggested that nursery shrubs for planting along the highways be raised at the state farm by the convicts, and this proposal met with considerable favor.

Another suggestion which was well received was that the fifty or more motorcycle police operating throughout Virginia under the division of motor vehicles, be especially instructed to keep an eye out for violators of the law forbidding promiscuous cutting of shrubs and trees.

Their Own Will

The will to live as well as local pride is revealed in the purchase by the town of Huntington, in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts, of the woolen mill upon which the majority of the residents depend for occupation. Closed for sometime, the mill has been bought by the townspeople, who have also raised funds for the purchase of needed equipment. The mill will not be run by the town, but will be leased to a manufacturing company on long terms; an offer is already said to have been made.—Hartford Courant.

Energetic Citizen

In the city of a neighboring state it is said one man has by himself succeeded in locating 16 different industries in his town with a pay roll up into the millions annually. Is there not food for thought in this item when you so often hear the remark made, "we could and should have more industrial plants in our town, but just can't get all the people to unite upon a plan by which we can be able to secure them." A leader and captain of industries is worth while anywhere.—Cullman (Ore.) Tribune.

Unsightly Billboards

The attempt to promote harmony between billboards and civic improvement ideals is a monumental task. The billboard people naturally desire to carry on their business and at the same time they want to soften the growing animosity against their interests. In short, they do not want to see any curtailment of their billboard privileges, while a very large part of the public would like to see billboards entirely eliminated from the landscape.—Providence Journal.

Movies Teach Beauty

To eliminate "the careless ugliness" of the nation's cities, the American Institute of Architects has started a campaign of public education in "good architecture and good environment." Moving pictures are being employed to illustrate how Washington is being developed as the city beautiful in high schools and colleges and before civic bodies.

Individuality

A well-designed building should express on its exterior the general scheme of its plan. That is, the larger units should be indicated in the design. In this way each building has its own individuality and the elevations show the particular reasons for its being.

Open Shed for Cows Is Practical Plan

Covered Barnyard Is Approved in Mild Climates.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The open shed or covered barnyard is a practical method of housing dairy cows in moderate climates, say dairy officials of the United States Department of Agriculture.

It provides the best-known method of preserving all the fertilizing constituents of the manure. When there is plenty of bedding, cows in open sheds keep cleaner than those confined in stanchions, even when manure is allowed to accumulate for several months at a time. At the experiment station of the bureau of dairy industry at Beltsville, Md., 68 per cent more bedding is used in the open shed than when the cows are stanchioned.

The open-shed method permits freedom of action of the cow and gets her off the hard floors of the cow barn. Also where a small milking barn is used, the open shed is a cheaper method of housing than the customary dairy barn.

The bureau of dairy industry is now building sheds at some of its field stations and dividing them into pens, so the herd may be divided into small groups. Mangers with rigid stanchions are built at the feed alley, so the cows may be fastened and fed individually. This is desirable because timid cows are often fought away from feed racks when the cows are not fastened at time of feeding. Cows housed in open sheds should be dehorned.

Self-Feeders Best for Fertility of the Soil

If we feed the land it will feed us and our stock, if we starve the land it will give us a slim living and but little profit for the work expended. The best, cheapest and most satisfactory way to feed land is with self feeders in the way of those plants which draw nutriment from the air and store it in the soil. This the legumes do, provided they have been inoculated and supplied with lime and enough fertility for their growth.

Legumes are receiving more attention in this country than in former years. Farmers are realizing more and more the need of keeping up the fertility of the soil. Much of the land which has been farmed for many years is so deficient in lime, and in some cases, fertility, that these elements must be supplied before we can begin feeding the land. Some few legumes such as alsike clover, white clover, and Japan clover and hop clover will do fairly well on acid land, but sweet clover, red clover and alfalfa are useless to sow on acid land, as they will not thrive even if they come up to a good stand.

Sweet Corn Develops in Sixty Days in Dakota

Sixty days from the time of planting the Gold Nugget sweet corn, a new variety recently developed by Prof. A. F. Yeager, horticulturist at the North Dakota Agricultural college, it is ready for table use. Seed was planted on the experiment station plots May 21 and the first ears were picked July 21.

Gold Nugget sweet corn was developed from a cross made in 1925 by Mr. Yeager between Sunshine and Pickaninny. As compared with Sunshine it is eight days earlier, the same quality and the color is golden yellow. The ears carry 8 to 10 rows and are produced nearly twice as abundantly as Sunshine, according to Mr. Yeager. This description is based on the performance of Gold Nugget on the college plots and may not hold elsewhere, he states.

The new variety of corn is being tried out in all parts of the country by seedsmen and experiment station workers. Its success generally throughout the country will be known next fall.

Fertilizing Asparagus to Insure Big Cutting

The Tennessee experiment station has made some explicit recommendations about fertilizing asparagus. They apply to both home and commercial plantings. One is to fertilize liberally during the first three growing seasons to insure a maximum cutting of large shoots during the fourth season.

This can be done by applying stable manure at the rate of ten tons per acre or poultry manure at the rate of one to two tons per acre. If applied during winter either may be scattered over the plants but during the growing season manure should be applied between the rows where it will not come in direct contact with the plants.

Weak Bee Colony Never Makes Surplus of Honey

Spring is the time when bees are in the most danger of starving. If they should be short of honey, feed them so they will keep up brood rearing and be strong in number of young bees at the time the honey flow begins and they will store surplus honey rapidly. A weak colony never makes surplus honey, but in many cases is completely destroyed by moths. You do not need a patent of any kind to keep away moths. They can never trouble a colony of strong bees. When pollen is scarce in the spring, put some flour where the bees can get it to use instead of pollen.

HOW COAL AND PEAT DEPOSITS ARE FORMED BY NATURE.—

It is generally agreed that coal is of plant origin and was formed in a manner similar to that in which peat is being formed today. A thorough study of peat from its inception to the more mature stages at its greatest depth becomes essential to the understanding of the constitution of coal and its formation.

With this objective a study was undertaken of the transformation of plant substances into peat and the composition of a deposit in profile from top to bottom with respect to its major components, their nature, their changes and their relations.

Peat formation is largely a problem of microbiology. The most important changes and eliminations during the transformation of plant substances into peat occur while the plant substances are still exposed to free access to air.

It has now been satisfactorily proved that bacteria exist in peat and are functioning to all depths of the deposit. A large number of inoculations have been made from the top to the bottom of several peat deposits and it is rare that cultures are not obtained.

These cultures are being propagated on wood in the form of sawdust and shavings, on cellulose and on other plant materials contained in flasks and bottles with proper mineral culture solutions. They are still active after seven to nineteen months. Available nitrogen is essential for their activities.

How Chief Executives Are Chosen by People

The manner of electing a President is established by the Constitution and the Twelfth amendment to the Constitution. It is an indirect method of expressing the will of the people of the various states, through electors chosen by the people of the states. There is no mention in the Constitution of "for the people by the people." The number of Presidential electors allotted to a state is the same as that state's total representation in both houses of congress; this in turn is partly dependent on the population of the state. New York state has the most, 45; next is Pennsylvania, 38; Illinois, 29; Ohio, 24; Texas, 20; Massachusetts and Missouri, each 18; Indiana and Michigan, each 15; Georgia and New Jersey, each 14; California, Iowa, Kentucky, Wisconsin, each 13; Alabama, Minnesota, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, each 12; Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, each 10; Arkansas, South Carolina, each 9; Maryland, Nebraska, West Virginia, each 8; Connecticut, Washington, each 7; Colorado, Florida, Maine, each 6; North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, each 5; Idaho, Montana, New Hampshire, Utah, Vermont, each 4; Arizona, Delaware, Nevada, New Mexico, Wyoming, each 3.

How Town Kept Its Birds

An unusual form of municipal enterprise is to be seen in Campinas, a Brazilian town in the state of Sao Paulo.

Years ago the citizens found their market house inadequate to their increasing commerce. They did not wish to pull down the old building, in which thousands of swallows yearly made their nests. So they built a new market house, and converted the old one into a municipal birdhouse, which, they claim, keeps them more free of insect pests than any town in Brazil.

When the birds migrate in autumn, the citizens clean and repair the building and make all ready for next year's occupation.

How Hornets Build Nests

The paper out of which hornets build their nests is made of chewed-up bits of weathered wood gathered from old fences and buildings. As one author describes it: "'Round the swampy edges of ponds or in wet ditches wasps and hornets may be seen gathering tough herbaceous filaments, which they felt up into a texture stronger and better able to resist the wind and rain than a paper made of wood scrappings."

How Deaf Hear "Talkies"

The Volta bureau says: "A few theaters have installed hearing devices whereby talking movies are made audible to hard-of-hearing patrons. The plan is too new to be called entirely successful. At a recent demonstration in Cleveland, Ohio, the majority of the audience, made up of hard-of-hearing persons, heard perfectly, a smaller percentage heard fairly well, and a still smaller percentage was unable to understand intelligently."

How Breeze Toyed With Ship

The American four-masted schooner, Charles D. Stanford, from Norfolk to Bermuda, had practically reached Bermuda, being only three miles off shore, when a southwest breeze struck the schooner and blew her out to sea. For nine days she was buffeted by high winds, several times reaching the neighborhood of Bermuda but each time being blown out to sea again. She finally was towed into port by the tug Powerful

FIND GREEK NAMES HARD TO REPLACE

In connection with the new name that Constantinople is to have in the future, it is stated that the Kemalist government of Turkey by adopting "Istamboul" as a substitute for Constantinople has not succeeded in eradicating the essentially Greek etymology of the word. In the Turkish vernacular the city of the Constantines is named Istamboul, from the Greek Eis tain polin, which, rendered into English, means "in the capital," or "in the city," as Constantinople is termed by Greeks and Turks alike throughout the Near East. The Turkish nationalists are endeavoring to remove the Greek or Armenian origins of most towns or cities without succeeding in finding appropriate substitutes for them. The conqueror of Constantinople, Sultan Mehmet II, was proud, however, of appropriating the title of "Sultan of the Romans" as the successor of the Constantines, but the present Turkish nationalists think that by a stroke of the pen they can uproot historic names of Hellenic origin, which not even the founders of "illustrious" Turkish dynasties have ever attempted to dispense with.

STERN WARNING ON OLD CURRENCY NOTE

"'Tis death to counterfeit."

This pointed warning is carried on an ancient four-dollar bill printed by the state of Maryland before the Revolutionary war, and has just come into possession of John V. Shea of the Treasury department, says the Washington Star.

The interesting old paper money is yellowed with age, but its inscriptions, which are still readable, show it was made according to an act of the assembly of Maryland dated in Annapolis on the "1st day of March, Anno Domini 1770."

On its face it bears these words: "Four dollars—Maryland. This indented bill of four dollars shall entitle the bearer hereof to receive bills of exchange payable in London in gold and silver at the rate of four shillings and sixpence." The warning of death to counterfeiters is printed in bold type across the back.

Mr. Shea received the old bill in a collection of old money, fractional currency, including a hero medal of Andrew Jackson, some old gold dollars, post office notes, half dimes, three-cent pieces and old pennies from the estate of his brother-in-law, George B. Wilde, who recently died at Cornwell, Pa.

The Golden Bough

Over one hundred years ago an orange tree in Bahia, Brazil, developed a freak limb bearing seedless fruit, since called navel oranges. This new orange was propagated by budding, and was finally brought to the United States in 1870.

Two small trees of the new variety were sent to California in 1873, and it is principally from these that the modern California orange industry has developed. The present shipment of California oranges requires the services of some 55,000 freight cars annually, and the crop fills 25,000,000 boxes.—Wall Street Journal.

Goose Got Revenge

A gun battle was staged in California between a wild goose and W. J. Speedy, of Pittsburgh. Speedy killed the goose, but the goose, with strength ebbing, shot the hunter. With others, Speedy was hiding in blinds when a flock of geese appeared overhead. The hunter picked the leader and shot. The goose dropped into an adjoining blind. In its death throes it kicked over a shotgun of one of Speedy's neighbors and the charge struck Speedy in the hand.

Court Rules State Land Not Taxable

State owned lands acquired by foreclosure through the department of rural credit are not subject to taxation according to a decision of the Minnesota Supreme court. That being true, other means will have to be found to take the place of the loss of revenue from these lands, otherwise there will be vast areas where there will be no money for schools, townships, or any other improvements.

The Rural Credit Bureau, while controlled by the state, is a business institution, supposed to be run for a profit, and as such should pay its share of the local taxes. If the state were to pay only the school and township levies against its lands, it would help a great deal as those are our greatest burdens. It makes little difference whether the state pays its share of the school and township burdens in taxes or in the form of aids, just so it pays its share.

If the farmers let their farms go back to the state and keep on as tenants, (yea, like a whole flock of ants) it means that the rural school will be wiped out as will the schools in villages that are now sunk in districts where about 20 percent of the land has already been turned in to the state and, another 20 percent hanging on by a shoestring.

Do you know that this means that there will be no township improvements, and many school districts and towships must default their bonds. It is now a big hope by many that the present legislature will do something to relieve this situation which, they may do if they don't dwell to much on malt syrup bills and other things that do not amount to a single benefit for the average dirt farmer.

Unsigned Letter Received

Someone sent us a letter this week in which they were taking the part of single girls who are forced to support themselves as against married women who have men working and making a living for them. It also carried a paragraph in which it stated that a woman should know before she marries a man whether or not he can support her without her working. It will also prove that to climb down a notch or two won't hurt anybody during these times.

If the party who sent us the letter will give us their name, we will publish it as it was sent in. Your name won't be used in the paper, but the copy must be signed.

Very Few "Surfaced" Highways Are Paved

The statement that Minnesota ranks third among the states in the mileage of "surfaced" roads has led to misunderstanding, says a Highway bulletin. Some people, apparently, confuse "paved" and "surfaced" roads, and jumped to the conclusion that Minnesota was among the leading states in miles of pavement, which is far from true.

A "surfaced" road is any road with a top layer of some material different from the sub-grade. This may be concrete, brick, asphalt, macadam, oil, tar, gravel, shale, sand-clay or top-soil. In Minnesota most of the 'surfaced' roads are graveled. Minnesota has 35,000 miles of state and local roads surfaced with gravel or other material. Ohio with 51,000 and Indiana with 46,000 are the only two with a larger mileage.

When it comes to pavement, Minnesota is far down the list with 1,434 miles. Paved roads are sometimes called "hard-surface", to distinguish them from other "surfaced" roads which may break down in periods of bad weather.

Twenty-two states now have more pavement than Minnesota. Leading the list are Pennsylvania with 10,500, New York with 9,795, Illinois with 7,836 (plus two or three thousand miles of paved county roads,) North Carolina with 4,435, Wisconsin, 3,717 and Iowa 3,554.

Iawa paved 1,029 miles in 1930 leading all the states, although Illinois with 981 miles, some of which were 40 feet wide, claims to have laid more square yards of paving than Iowa. Louisiana expects to break the record with 1,200 miles in 1931.

The Rosewood Farmers' Club has purchased the bank building in that village and will remodel it for future use as a public hall. Funds will be raised through the selling of shares.

School Notes

First and Second Grades

The party at Lorentson's was enjoyed by all. Different prizes were given to the winners of the contest.

The 2d grade people are going to give a short play to entertain the 1st grade.

Betty Lou brought a very pretty flower to school. Irene Ness also brought one. It was a geranium.

Some of the little folks have reported seeing blackbirds and robins. Evidently spring is on the way.

Lots of little visitors were present at our party to watch the airplane, Spirit of St. Valentine, distribute its contents. Everyone received many valentines.

The 1st and 2d grades went to the 3d and 4th grade room downstairs, to listen to their program.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The 6th grade geography class is about to start on a trip through Asia. We have made the suitcases to take with us, which we hope to fill with curiosities.

The result of the Mental Test was satisfactory in most cases.

We tried our skill at safety jingles and among those presented we found these warnings:

1.-If you want the germs to come,
Suck your finger and your thumb.
2.-Little Miss Muffet was crossing the street,
When something came and drove over her feet.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Wins Prizes in Essay Contest

Gertrude Nygaard won district and county prizes and third honorable mention on the essay, "We Work For Sobriety." For district prizes she received two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50), and for county prize, one dollar and twenty-five cents ($1.25). She wrote this essay when she was in the sixth grade, with Miss Rognlie as her teacher.

Mrs. Lorentson presented the prizes to Gertrude.

Ruth Bottem is still absent from school due to a cold.

We are now taking great interest in the puzzle given over KSTP during their puzzle hour.

On Friday we took a test given out by the Kansas State Teachers College. Its purpose was to compare the standing of our school with the others in United States.

We have found a good name for the Freshmen, and we think it fits them to a T. It is Verdant.

Our party went over "hot" on Friday. Gertrude Nygaard won the heart by making the most words out of "Valentine". The postmasters who studied Valentines were: Chief Postmaster, Ruth Engebretson; Assistants, Gertrude Nygaard and LidaMonson.

High School

We all had a good time at our party given by the Sophomores on Friday night.

Stilof Anderson was hurt while playing hockey on Monday. We all render our sympathy because it isn't much of a joke to wear our noses bandaged up like he must.

The Commercial Geography class have begun the study of the British Isles this week.

Helen Swan, Ruth Saastad, and Alice Hagen were absent Friday afternoon.

Winners at Winter Crop Show

The Shorthorn herd of Monroe Brothers of Warren was the outstanding feature of the Marshall county exhibits at the Red River Valley Winter Shows held at Crookston last week.

The Monroe herd won the grand and junior champinships on a heifer and placed first in all of the herds and groups of beef cattle, except the championship cow, which went to C. O. Gunhus, of Foston. The Monroes were awarded seven 1st prizes, three second prizes and two 3rd prizes.

In the Guernsey class Albert Johnson of Thief River Falls got the championship and scored most of the first prizes.

Ruby Howard, Warren, won 3rd prize on dairy calf in the Boys and Girls Club class.

In Duroc Jersey hogs Arthur Howard and John Cheney, both of Warren, were awarded 2nd and prizes for the aged herd, while Cheney also scored second 2nd prize for the young herd. Hirst & Sons, of Warren, were awarded the junior champion prize for the senior boar and John Cheney captured the senior grand championrhip for a two year old sow. Howard was also awarded prizes for the junior champion sow.

Carl E. Anderson of Warren, got 2nd prize on a pen of three market hogs.

Lee Munger and Carl E. Anderson exhibited a number of Shropshire sheep and got several prizes. The sheep exhibits were especially numerous this year, most of the competition coming from North Dakota herds.

Hirst & Son of Warren had an exhibit of Southdown sheep and were awarded several prizes.

The Pioneer Land & Loan Co., of Warren were awarded third prize on spring wheat; 3rd prize for two-row barley; 1st prize for alfalfa seed and first prize for millet seed.

John Allen of Radium was awarded 1st prize for Burbank potatoes.

Hjelle Brothers of Newfolden captured first prize for red clover seed. They have been awarded this prize at previous shows.

Trappers' License

Trapping licenses issued for the year 1930 expired December 31 and those who expect to continue trapping operations must secure new permits if they desire to continue their operations through the balance of the present winter season.

Licenses for trapping were until two years ago issued for the trapping season from fall until spring, but under the new ruling they are issued January first and hold good only until the first of the following year.

Application for such licenses should be made to the County Auditor.

Holders of 1930 licenses are requested to fill out the blanks which provide space for reports of the animals taken, and mail them to the Game and Fish Commissioner, Old Capitol, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Hunters are also requested to fill out the cards which were provided with their hunting licenses for 1930, giving a complete report of the number and kind of game taken during the open seasons, and these should be mailed at once to the Game and Fish Commissioner. This is compulsory if the hunter desires to secure a license for the present year.

Pointers on Feeding

Roughage and succulence are fed in the proportion of one pound of roughage and three pounds succulence for every hundred pounds live weight of the animal.

From six to eight pounds of concentrate should be fed the average thousand pound cow.

A good rule to follow is to feed one pound of concentrates to every three or four pounds of milk produced.

Feed formulas can be procured from the University of Minnesota' St. Paul, or from the Dept. of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expressed fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Musia wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women." To Vladimir, Musia criticizes her brother Ilya's acceptance of the situation. She knows Vladimir is a member of an organization working for the downfall of the Bolsheviki. Vladimir kills a Bolshevik soldier and is arrested. A raiding party searches the Krassin home. Ilya is taken prisoner. Planning to save her son, Mrs. Krassin induces Musia to accompany her on a visit to Loris. The latter is busy and they are obliged to wait.

He pointed out to them a vacant bench on the station platform beside the train. An old dirty bench. Here they sat for a long time, patiently awaiting audience. The bench gradually filled up with people as time crawled on, mostly shabby soldiers and shabbier old women. Musia noted the fact that she was the only girl among them. All seemed awaiting some decision as to their various destinies, for all save some of the soldiers looked depressed and anxious. Two or three times she went to the guard and asked when their turn would come, as she had seen many people who had come after them, going into the car and emerging. Always she received the same answer: "Tovarisch is busy."

Thus many hours passed. They began to see that because of their appearance of rank they were to be the last admitted. It was a new age of inequality.

Mrs. Krassin sat impassive. When Musia had attempted anything in the way of conversation, she was ignored. It seemed as if a barrier had interposed itself between them. The silence was oppressive. To Musia the discrimination against them in the matter of admission seemed to augur against their success. As for Mrs. Krassin, she seemed to have taken on the stolidity of the patient peasant women with whom she waited on the bench, accepting her leveling with the crowd. At last they were the only ones left on the bench, and the guard, throwing the words at them as one casts a bone to a dog, told them to enter the car.

They stepped into a corridor, and then into the reception room. Both were splendidly rich. There were large Turkish divans all around the walls of the reception room; and on these divans, on the walls, and on the floor, were magnificent Persian rugs. The oriental aspect imparted to the place by these things was heightened by a collection of swords, pistols and knives in richly embossed leather, carved ivory and beautifully chased and ornamented gold and silver sheaths and holsters, some of them set with diamonds, turquoises and other precious stones; all these tastefully disposed on the walls.

The room did not look like the workroom of a functionary, but suggested leisure, luxury, voluptuousness—all with a touch of the barbaric.

Mrs. Krassin felt ill at ease. This unexpected magnificence depressed her as she thought of the little collection of jewels she had brought. She felt depressed and indignant, as she looked around her and thought, "Everything here is stolen—from us."

She felt insulted and abused by what she saw. Her presence in this brigand's nest was a humiliation. Then she recalled her errand—and from that moment she felt no contradictory impulse or hesitation.

Ilya's rescue and redemption took possession of all her heart and soul. With a trembling hand she straightened the lace at her breast, cast a side glance at Musia and was pleased to note how pure and pretty she looked. Mechanically she pushed down to the bottom of her reticule the money and jewelry she had fetched with her. Musia saw the movement and lowered her eyes; their little treasure, she thought, was of small account here.

Again they waited a long time, standing a little apart in the middle of the room. There was no rule of etiquette in the Bolshevist headquarters, and visitors might sit or stand as they pleased; but they knew that they were incurring the possibility of being rebuked if they seated themselves, and they felt that their self-respect required them to stand.

Suddenly the Persian hanging which covered the doorway into the inner apartment was swept aside, and a tall man in Cossack uniform stepped in.

They were face to face with the great Bolshevik commissar.

Mrs. Krassin in the days immediately following often tried to recall the details of Loris' appearance; but she had a confused remembrance of bright, intelligent eyes, a scar across a white forehead, a silver earring worn after the fashion of some of the Cossacks.

Musia remembered every feature—the slender hands which showed no trace of former toil, the flaring, sensitive nostril, like that of a Arab horse, the arched eyebrows, the graceful movements of every limb. He was as different from that nasty wretch Vilinsky as Apollo from a satyr; she had half expected that there would be a resemblance between them, and was relieved. But when he spoke, her heart sank again.

With a quick gesture of habitual authority he dismissed the guard. He did not apologize for having kept them waiting so long outside, or for keeping them standing in the reception room.

He looked Mrs. Krassin over with a glance which moved from her feet to her head in a manner that was unspeakably rude; and then he turned his gaze upon Musia. Their eyes met, and for a moment she gazed into those black orbs which had struck so many visitors with terror. Her glance dropped to the floor, while she remained conscious that he was scanning her face with a continuance of that incivility of his. A tinge of red dyed her cheeks, and her heart beats tingled her finger ends.

Then she became conscious that, after the guard had departed, he had indicated, half by a word, half by a gesture, that they were to be seated. She stole another glance at him. This invitation to be seated looked favorable to her, and she wanted to verify her changing appraisement of the man—their antagonist. Nothing Bolshevik about him, she felt.

His eye glanced from one of his visitors to the other; from Mrs. Krassin, with her haughty plain face, the face of one in torment, to Musia, with her pallor just tinged at his impudent glance with pink, her wide anxious eyes, her blond head, her dainty girlish purity and prettiness, her atmosphere of culture—qualities of which he had seen little in that ogre's den of his.

"Well?" he said interrogatively—but in a voice which conveyed the idea that he was always saying it to some one, and cared very little what the response might be.

Mrs. Krassin began her speech. He looked toward the door with the manner of one conscious of taking part in some unusual proceeding, and wondering whether or not anyone is overhearing or observing it. He moved uneasily, lifted his hand as if in protest when Mrs. Krassin had uttered a sentence or two, but after a glance at Musia he sat impassive as she went on.

Speaking in what she had always thought her best manner, Mrs. Krassin laid her case before him. She laid great stress on her words, stringing them on the thread of her discourse like pearls. She usually spoke well, and on this greatest of all occasions of her life, she did her very best. She suggested that her son, Ilya, had been apprehended by the party sent out by the commissar, under some misapprehension; and she dwelt on the harmless character of Ilya, and showed that the idea of his having been engaged in any plots or conspiracies was utterly out of the question.

It was a good deal of an oration. The fact that the woman was pleading for something much dearer to her than life did not seem to occur to Loris. Perhaps he had become calloused to appeals of this sort; and, after all, as Mrs. Krassin's speech drew on to a length approaching that of a lecture, one in Loris' position may be excused for being a little bored. The thing was so very plain. Either the matter would be resolved according to her desires, or it would not; and that was all there was to it. He made one or two movements of impatience; but each time he looked at Musia's anxious ghostly face, with all the pink driven back to her heart now, and withheld his protest. Mrs. Krassin began with "My son was arrested," and ended after what seemed even to Musia like a very long time, with "I hope you will," and "My innocent son." At the end, according to the Russian custom, she handed him a written petition.

Grades for Honey

For a long time liquid honey has been sold on the market on a basis of grade. The lighter colored honeys, such as that coming from white clover, have commanded the highest price and the darker grades, such as that made from buckwheat, brought the lowest price. Until very recently, there was no reliable method of determining the actual color grade. Those buying and selling honey depended upon their experiences and judgment.

The pie-plant and asparagus have good food value and besides are indeed health giving materials. Some folks say that these two vegetables are better than medicine.

THE MISSES MITTEN

By Fannie Hurst

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THE Misses Mitten kept one of those neighborhood notion stores that are a panacea for housewives. There, at around-the-corner distance, were needles for that emergency, tape, red-and-white checked gingham to fit a last-minute determination to make kitchen curtains, rubber teething-rings, baby-ribbon and sewing-silks that matched.

Even in the heart of an enormous city, with an elevated railroad banging past its door and the roar of traffic on four sides, the notion store of the Misses Mitten had managed to become a sort of neighborhood rendezvous. People from the tall surrounding apartment houses, little housekeepers, men whose business brought them home at three o'clock in the afternoon, the youth of the block, had formed the habit of dropping in for a few moments' chat with the Misses Mitten.

They were precisely what you would suppose them to be from the nature of the calling and from the name itself. Mitten. Neat-mouthed, neat-minded, neat-bodied little persons who had grown up in the neighborhood, who had inherited the business from their parents and whose faces were stamped with a starved kind of virginity.

Minna was forty and Bella was forty-two and, as is almost inevitably the case in such relationships, the younger, although even slightly so, had kept the fluffier. Minna was like a little kitten. She had a high, incessant little laugh like a small bell ringing. Her pale hair had fuzzy ends and she had the innocent ways of a little girl—she was given to clapping her hands in surprise or tilting her head askance or pouting prettily if crossed.

Bella, who was heavier set and whose brown hair did not friz, had inevitably taken on a maternal attitude toward this kitten sister. She babied her, worried about droughts and diet and her habit of wearing too light clothing in the winter. They were sweet together and a nice example of sisters managing to live harmoniously.

Of course—do not mistake it—there was nothing particularly exhilarating about the lives they lived. Indeed, there had been a time when such a state of nervous depression had settled upon Minna, that Bella, sick with dread, had feared for her sanity. The routine, the dullness, the lack of social opportunity and diversion had done it. Bella herself, when much younger, had passed through the same troubled waters. Their youth had been a shut-up, starveling youth, without any of the gayeties natural to it.

Bella had fought through alone. Minna had fought through to the understanding ministerings of her older sister.

All that was past now. The Misses Mitten, ostensibly at least, had become resigned to the fact that there are gray moths and emperor moths in the scheme of things, and that their role apparently was gray.

And just about this time, there came into the life of Bella, the elder, a good-natured, good-humored, middle-aged bachelor, a retired stock broker who lived in the neighborhood and who liked to while away idle moments in the notion store. With what incredulity these two sisters met the situation is past the telling. Here was something so unforseen, so outside the pale of hope, so fantastic in its possibilities, that the Misses Mitten, between the two of them, could scarcely scare up the realization to take it in.

Romance was leaning a shy, half-reluctant head into the narrow little world of the Mittens.

The kind of life that had passed by these two sisters with never a glance in their direction was slowing as it flowed by their stoop.

It was nothing short of breath-taking to have the shop door pop open and a florist's boy, carrying a square corsage box, or a long one with the end cut out for still longer rose stems, burst in with the words, "Miss Bella Mitten?" on his lips.

Flowers for a Mitten!

Then, too, the new excitements. Concert tickets (three) for Sunday in the Stadium. A two-pound box of nut-filled chocolates every Wednesday night. One Saturday afternoon while Minna remained in the store, Bella and Dodge went shopping. Shopping, mind you, for a black fox neck scarf which Dodge had seen in a shop window on Madison Avenue and was determined to see around the neck of Bella in order that he might decide if it became her. That was to be his birthday gift.

A Mitten receiving a fur scarf birthday gift from an admirer!

Small wonder that a new excitement purred through that menage. Small wonder that two timid, mouse-brown women, inured to routine and petty pastimes, suddenly found themselves rushing about on feet that scurried.

There was an air, in the tiny household, of some one always about to catch a train. Every opening of the shop door, or ring of the bell, was the occasion for a start or a jump. Every minute held its potential thrill. Its potential heartache.

Bella knew that, and sometimes a fear settled on her, chilling and threatening her. Was her happiness about to cast tragedy over the life of her sister? Well Bella knew the old familiar situation. Two women, grown as they had grown, into middle years, dependent upon each other in a hundred ways. Afraid even to contemplate a life which did not contain the old regime. Women who had missed somehow, the love of men, and who clung to the mutual solace of each other.

Bella knew the dangers that lurked for Minna, and she knew, too, the dangers that lurked for herself. Mistaken renunciation. Futility of sacrifice under certain conditions. It took courage to realize that. Sometimes there crept into Bella's heart the impulse to cast aside this impending opportunity for happiness, and let her destiny flow along with her sister's. But most of the time Bella kept her courage in hand. Why wreck her own chance of happiness and possibly Myron Dodge's when she was not even sure of achieving happiness by such a renunciation, for Minna?

And so when Myron Dodge, fifty, hale, hearty, wholesome and astonishingly well-to-do, actually proposed marriage to Bella Mitten across a counter where, for twenty years, she had dispensed needles, spool-thread, invisible hairpins and huck towelling, a heart-hurting situation was created.

There enters the familiar complication of an older sister impelled to renunciate, in the name of the younger. And it must be said that Minna, perhaps because she was frailer, fought off, if not in actual words, then with the terror of her manner, this marriage of her sister's. Minna was frightened, desolated, panic stricken. It seemed impossible that she could go in a world that contained Bella, married.

And the marvel of it is that Bella did not make the stupid sacrifice in the name of sisterly love. After a struggle, it is true, a long heart-breaking one, and with Minna's unspoken attitude making it all the more difficult, Bella decided that the really generous act toward her sister and herself, to say nothing of the man she loved, was to marry Myron Dodge.

It meant heartache, it meant heart-hurt, it meant a residium of fear and pity in the heart of Bella even as she stood a bride. But deep within her persisted the instinct that not to have married Myron Dodge would have been one of those purposeless, sentimental sacrifices which in the end only embitter all concerned.

If there had ever lurked in Bella any fear that Myron might not rise to the occasion of treating his sister-in-law with the pampered indulgence to which she was accustomed, that fear was quickly dispelled.

For the first two years of their marriage, the Myron Dodges traveled abroad, accompanied every inch of the way by the smaller and frailer Minna. And if she had been indulged by Bella, before this marriage, twice that kindliness, twice that forbearance was expended in her behalf by Myron. It was his way of paying Bella a tribute he knew would mean most to her.

The three of them finally decided to settle down in a lovely old Sussex cottage in England for a year or so. Life is pleasant there. Almost unbelievably so. Tranquil. Full of beauty and happiness.

Bella never has any regrets over her wisdom in not making the sacrifice in behalf of her sister. Indeed, on the contrary, she often figures pleasantly to herself that, if she had not had the strength to ignore her scruples and make this marriage, Minna, from the fastnesses of the little notion store, would never have met up with Cleveland Aley.

Cleveland Aley is a prosperous squire in Sussex whose attentions to Minna are becoming more and more marked.

Chinese Ban Dancing

"Here all evil tending to encourage degradation must be suppressed," says the preamble to a formal order issued by the Nanking (China) government, which prohibits foreign-style dancing in hotels, cafes or cabarets in the city of Nanking. "Dancing," the order continues, "is an evil, and not a healthy recreation. The practice of dancing by men and women throughout the night is detrimental to public health and public morality. It has been learned that some hotels and cafes in the capital have sold dancing tickets. This must be strictly prohibited in order to prevent our young people from going astray." The order concludes by notifying all officials, city, government, garrison commander and others, to "pay special attention to festivities of this nature, and take prompt steps to prohibit and suppress them."

Cliff Furnishes Medicine

Beachy Head is being swallowed by patients at St. Thomas' hospital, London, at the rate of two tons a year, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. The chalk of this famous cliff is the chief ingredient of a new powder that has reduced the number of operations at the hospital for the relief of certain stomach troubles from one or two a day to one a month. In the out-patients' department a hundredweight of the powder is used every month by two hundred or more patients. The powder consists of a mixture of bicarbonate of soda, magnesia, bismuth and chalk. Bismuth costs the hospital 9 shillings and 9 pence a pound, while chalk can be bought for 11 shillings a hundredweight. And chalk gives just as good results as bismuth.

Doctor's 3 RULES
Big Help to Bowels

What a joy to have the bowels move like clockwork, every day! It's easy, if you mind these simple rules of a famous old doctor:

1. Drink a big tumblerful of water before breakfast, and several times a day.
2. Get plenty of outdoor exercise without unduly fatiguing yourself.
3. Try for a bowel movement at exactly the same hour every day.

Everyone's bowels need help at times, but the thing to use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You'll get a thorough cleaning-out, and it won't leave your insides weak and watery. This family doctor's prescription is just fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other helpful ingredients that couldn't hurt a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

Clean up that coated tongue, sweeten that bad breath, and get rid of those bilious headaches. A little Syrup Pepsin will soon free the bowels from all that waste matter that makes the whole system sluggish. You'll eat better, sleep better and feel better.

You'll like the way Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin tastes. The way it works will delight you. Big bottles—all drugstores.

Russia's Great Railroad

The great Trans-Siberian railroad stretches from Chelyabinsk to Vladivostok. There is a branch line from Kharbin to Port Arthur. At the other end it connects with the railway to Moscow. The railroad crosses the northeastern corner of Manchuria, crosses the Altai mountains, circles around the southern end of Lake Baikal, turns north across to Krasnolarsk, then west to Omsk, and on across the Ural mountains. It is not now operated as a system as in the days of the Russian empire, but its sections are controlled by the separate states through which the line runs.

BUILDS UP THE BLOOD

La Crosse, Wis. —"My mother always kept Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in her medicine chest and gave it to members of the family as a blood and stomach medicine. I have always taken it as such, especially in spring time. I think it the best medicine anyone can take as a spring tonic and to build up and enrich the blood. It also regulates the liver and is good for weak stomach—it renovates the entire system."— Chas. Van Sickle, 821 La Crosse. All druggists.

Laundry Work in India

Washing clothes in India is no science. It's just a hereditary vice passed down from father to son from ancient Vedic times, says an English woman living in that country.

The dhobi takes your clothes down to the river bank or to some pool of water, soaks them and then vigorously bashes them against some handy stone. After that they are laid out on the ground to dry or else festooned over bushes. Thorn bushes are preferred, as the thorns hold the clothes when the wind blows.

Knew Him Too Well

Before starting on his world tour, not long before he died, Lord Northcliffe arranged with the members of his staff who were to accompany him that they should keep apart in ships "so that we shall not get tired of each other."

"I told them," wrote Northcliffe, in his diary of the trip, "the joke of the butler and the master. 'You give me notice, John? What's the matter? You have been with me many years, received good wages, good living, and had plenty of spare time of yourself.'

"'Quite true, my lord,' replied John, 'but the fact is I hates to see yer faces.'"—Kansas City Times.

Lose Fat Safely and Quickly

Kruschen Salts—(a perfect combination of the six mineral salts your body should have to function properly) purify your blood of harmful acids, and aid the kidneys and bowels to throw off waste material—the continual formation of which is probably the cause of your fat.

In this modern age of living, it's impossible to get these salts from the fancy foods you eat—but don't worry just as long as you have Kruschen Salts.

Take a half teaspoon every morning before breakfast in a glass of hot water—little by little that ugly fat disappears, you'll feel better than ever before—years younger, more energy. You'll soon possess that enviable beauty, clear skin, sparkling eyes, superb figure which only perfect health can impart.

An 85c bottle (lasts 4 weeks) at any progressive druggist in America. Money back if Kruschen doesn't convince you that it is the safest, quickest, easiest way to lose fat.

A Hartford woman writes, "I'll tell the world Kruschen Salts is wonderful stuff to reduce." An Ohio woman lost 10 pounds with one bottle.—Adv.

Inoffensive Panther

The cougar or puma, commonly called "panther," still occurs in small numbers in the wilder parts of south Florida, on the borders of the Everglades and in the "Big Cypress," says Nature Magazine. It is a somewhat smaller animal than the mountain lion of the Rocky mountains, but it is of the same tawny color, and, like all of its tribe, is a timid, inoffensive beast. A black individual has been reported in Dade county by several observers.

The beauty of some women is only cosmetic deep.

Her Reward

When children are weak and rundown, they are easy prey to colds or children's diseases. So it is never wise to neglect those weakening and depressing symptoms of bad breath, coated tongue, fretfulness, feverishness, biliousness, lack of energy and appetite, etc.

Nine times out of ten these things point to one trouble—constipation—and mothers by thousands know this is easily, safely relieved by California Fig Syrup.

Mrs. Chas. J. Connell, 1434 Cleary Ave., St. Louis, Mo., says: "I gave Virginia California Fig Syrup for constipation and she was more than rewarded for taking it. It regulated her bowels, helped her digestion, increased her appetite, made her strong and energetic."

The genuine, endorsed by doctors for 50 years, always bears the word California. All drugstores have it.

Big Market for Corn Opened Up

Lifting Restrictions on Use of Dextrose Solves Surplus Crop Problem.

New York.—That decidedly larger quantities of refined corn sugar will be produced and that many more millions of bushels of corn will consequently be used in 1931 than in any previous year in the history of the refined corn sugar trade is the prediction of experts as a result of Secretary of Agriculture Hyde's recent ruling in which he placed a new administative interpretation on the federal food definitions which for twenty-five years have restricted the uses of refined corn sugar as an ingredient in the preparation and packing of food products.

Of the total annual corn crop of approximately 2,750,000,000 bushels, about 275,000,000 bushels, representing 10 per cent, goes to the primary or "cash" markets. Thus the price of corn is based not on the whole crop but on the small percentage that finds its way to immediate cash channels.

Better Prices for Corn.

Under Mr. Hyde's ruling, almost immediately this "cash corn" will be increased according to the most conservative estimates by 20,000,000 bushels. It can readily be seen that this increased demand for corn by industry will result in better prices for "cash corn" and will be reflected in better prices for corn for all purposes. It is also further pointed out that with the stigma officially removed from the uses of refined corn sugar (dextrose) in the manufacture of confections, preserves, and the innumerable canned products, the demand for industrial purposes may grow to the extent that the United States will no longer have a surplus corn crop, and the problems of export will solve themselves.

The average number of bushels of corn which have gone directly into the manufacture of refined corn sugar for the past several years is estimated at 5,650,000 bushels. This has been converted into 130,000,000 pounds of dextrose. Under the new decision, corn products officials declare, the demand for refined corn sugar may be increased 400 per cent and that the next year may see the production of 520,000,000 pounds. Accordingly, as a means of relief to the farmers throughout the corn belt, Mr. Hyde's action will be far-reaching in its effects.

Enlarge Production Facilities.

Shortly after the announcement of the removal of the restriction, officials of the larger refineries took steps toward planning the enlargement of the productive facilities. This entails new building plans over a period of time, the extension of equipment and additional employment, thus bringing prosperity of a substantial character to the districts in which the refineries are located.

The governors of seven states in the corn belt have already signified their commendation of Secretary Hyde's ruling in officially removing the stigma which has been placed on refined corn sugar and thereby permitting corn farmers a just assistance in times of temporary depression. They are Gov. Henry S. Caulfield of Missouri, Gov. Clyde M. Reed of Kansas, Gov. Harry G. Leslie of Indiana, Gov. Arthur J. Weaver of Nebraska, Gov. Louis L. Emmerson of Illinois, Gov. John G. Richards of South Carolina and Gov. John Hammill of Iowa.

Man Pays 35-Year-Old Meat Bill With Interest

Springfield, Mo.—The McCoy brothers are hailing one man as the original honest man. They recount the story of how, thirty-five years ago, a man entered their meat market and ordered $4.45 worth of meat on credit. He failed to pay the bill. Just the other day the same man walked in and asked for a bill. Old ledgers were dug out and a bill was given him. He paid it with interest.

Hospital to "Brand" Babies With Sun Lamp

Newark, N. J.—Beth Israel hospital, Newark, adopted an entirely new system for the identification of babies born in the institution. A few minutes after the child has been born, a stencil containing the initials of the mother will be placed on an arm of both the mother and child and will be sunburned onto the skin by exposure to an ultraviolet ray lamp. The hospital considers the method a perfectly harmless and satisfactory scheme.

The slightly red initials will remain visible for ten days and if the patients are placed in a dark room the letters may be detected for several weeks longer. Dr. Paul Keller of the hospital staff developed the system.

Hunter Tells of Being Treed by Bear Family

Berwick, Pa.—William Temple, veteran Benton hunter, returned from the woods with a bear story by which he stands firm in guaranteeing the authenticity.

Temple said that while hunting on North mountain he stepped into a clearing just as four bears, two adults and two cubs, appeared. The larger bears charged, he said, and he fired, killing one of them.

The other bear continued on, stepping over the body of its comrade, to pursue Temple, who took refuge in a tree. The bear and the cubs stood guard around the tree until dark, when they disappeared.

COFFINS FOR PARENTS IN ROOM OF PARALYZED SON

Helpless Virginia Man Has Gazed Two Years on Grim Death Reminders.

Luray, Va.—Two coffins awaiting their owners' deaths, occupying the same room where lies a paralyzed former fireman on the Norfolk & Western railroad, are intensifying tragic events connected with the family of J. D. Ruffner, a farmer of this county.

For a long time the coffins, made for Mr. and Mrs. Ruffner, have been in their home. The farmer and his wife are both more than eighty years old. In order to avoid "confusion" at the time of his death, Mr. Ruffner says, the coffins were made. A local undertaker furnished them according to Mr. Ruffner's specifications.

J. C. Ruffner, the paralyzed former railroad man, is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Ruffner. For two years he has occupied the same room where the death reminders are kept. He can neither move nor speak; only stare at the receptacles.

Tragedy has trailed the Ruffner family for years. Another son of the aged couple a number of years ago shot and killed his uncle. He served only a short time in prison. This was followed by another member of the Ruffner family shooting and killing their son-in-law, Mark Walker. This killing was committed within 100 feet of the coffins and the paralyzed fireman's room.

Later Noah Fox, a relative of the Ruffners, was shot and killed within 100 yards of the "coffin room." Fox was slain by his son-in-law, George Riley, who was acquitted of the crime in the Page county court.

Rare Foods Now Being Shipped to Sweden by Air

Malmoe, Sweden.—Culinary delicacies now travel by air to and from Sweden, instead of by rail and boat as before. Thus grapes from the Rhone valley and oysters from the coast of Brittany are sent via air express from Paris on the Amsterdam-Malmoe line and the next day delight the palates of gourmands in Stockholm or Gothenburg. Swedish specialties, such as crawfish, are also frequently shipped abroad in the same manner.

How to Escape FLU

1 Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.

2 Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.

3 Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.

4 Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle; this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.

5 If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

Hotel "Greeter's" Desk No Place for Sarcasm

Joel Hillman, Atlantic City hotel man, said to a reporter on a New York pier—he was on his way to his hotel in Paris:

"The room clerks or greeters aren't cordial enough in some of our American hotels. Henry James complained about it in his book.

"The front of the house can't be too cordial. In a shore hotel that busted recently a new guest said to a greeter:

"'I like my seventh floor back, friend, but ain't the bed rather short?'

"'Well, you see,' said the greeter, and he laughed in the guest's face, 'you see, the people who take our seventh floor backs are usually rather short themselves.'"

SWEETEN ACID STOMACH THIS PLEASANT WAY

When there's distress two hours after eating—heartburn, indigestion, gas—suspect excess acid.

The best way to correct this is with an alkali. Physicians prescribe Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

A spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water neutralizes many times its volume in excess acid; and does it at once. To try it is to be through with crude methods forever.

Be sure to get genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. All drugstores have the generous 25c and 50c bottles. Full directions in package.

Trees Conserve Water

There is undoubtedly a close relationship between the forest cover and the underground water supply. Springs in wooded areas discharge five times more water than those in clearings. For many years it has been known from investigation in some of the states along the Mississippi and Ohio river valleys that deforestation has a tendency to dry up springs and lower the average level of the water table.

A study, covering 22 years in which 9,507 wells were examined in the central states, indicated the lowering of the water table 13.8 feet for a period of 80 years or since the time the settlers began clearing the land. The loss of so much water is due largely to quick run-off in freshets and floods which may be caused by the absence of forests.

Williamson, Mortgagee, and with a Power of Sale therein contained duly filed for Record in the Office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on November 8th, 1926, at 8 o'clock A. M., and recorded in Book 114 of Mortgages, on page 446 thereof,

AND WHEREAS the said Mortgage, and the Note accompanying the same contain a Provision that in case of any default in the Terms and Conditions thereof the Mortgagee may at his Option elect to declare the whole Sum secured by the said Mortgage to be due and payable at once, and

WHEREAS the Mortgagee by reason of said Default has declared and does hereby declare the whole Sum secured by said Mortgage to be due and payable pursuant to the Option and Provisions in said Mortgage contained, and as authorized by the Mortgage provisions, and

WHEREAS pursuant to the Mortgagee's said Election there is claimed to be due, and is now actually due and payable under and pursuant to the Terms of said Mortgage the Total Sum of Twelve Hundred Eighty-four and No-100 ($1,284.00) Dollars, inclusive of Principal and Interest to date of this Notice, and

WHEREAS the Power of Sale contained in said Mortgage has become operative, and No Action or Proceeding having been instituted at Law or otherwise to Recover the Debt secured by said Mortgage, or any Part thereof,

NOW THEREFORE NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that by Virtue of the Power of Sale in said Mortgage contained, and pursuant to Statute in such cases made and provided, the said Mortgage will be Foreclosed by a Sale of the following Premises described in and Conveyed by said Mortgage, situated and located in Marshall County, Minnesota, viz:

Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Nine (9), in Township One Hundred fifty-four (154) North, of Range Forty-two (42), West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County, Minnesota, containing 160 acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, thereunto belonging, which said Sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County, Minnesota, at the West front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren, in Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 21st day of February 1931, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day at Public Vendue to the highest bidder for Cash, to pay said Debt of Twelve Hundred Eighty-four and No-100 ($1,284.00) Dollars, together with interest to date of Sale, and the Taxes if any on said Premises, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars Attorneys fees as provided in said Mortgage in Case of Foreclosure, and the Costs and Disbursements allowed by Law, subject to redemption at any time within one Year from the Day of Sale as Provided by Law.

Dated January 2nd, 1931.

Music From the Sky

A CARILLON is an "organ of bells," played by both hands and feet and differs from the ordinary one-note-at-a-time chime in that chords of many notes can be played.

Carillons have come down to us through the corridor of time, having been in use in Europe since the Sixteenth century, where they are regarded with both pride and affection as a community possession and have contributed greatly to the public appreciation of inspiring music.

The largest and most complete carillon in America hangs in the tower of the Park Avenue Baptist church in New York city—the gift of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in memory of his mother. Cast in England, it contains fifty-three bells, having 110,199 pounds of vibrating bell metal. The bells range in size from eight feet two inches in diameter, weighing 20,720 pounds (low E—said to be the deepest-toned carillon bell in all creation) to one but six and one-quarter inches in diameter, weighing only nine pounds.

Bell experts declare that there are five tones in each bell that are distinguishable to the trained ear and that in order to insure perfect harmony each bell must be tuned to itself and also with all other bells in the carillon.

Obviously, carillon music is both melodious and inspiring. In the hands of an experienced carillonneur such bells speak with surprising intelligence. No words can entirely describe the unbelievable tonal vibrations as this music from the sky floats out from a church tower and fills the air with its uplifting song.

FINDS STATE BANKS WELL SUPERVISED

Bankers Body Sees Less Politics in Banking Departments With Better Facilities in the Hands of the Responsible Officials.

A survey of state banking departments by the State Bank Division, American Bankers Association, discloses a distinct tendency the past five years to take bank supervision out of politics, to increase the discretionary powers of bank commissioners, to lengthen their terms of office, to supply them with adequate forces of qualified examiners and to relieve banking departments of duties foreign to banking, says a recent statement issued by the association.

"We have consistently urged that the office of bank commissioner be as free from partisan politics as the judiciary itself and that it be divorced from all other functions of state government," the statement says. "Further, that a term of office be made more secure and lasting, with sufficient salary and power granted to attract and retain the services of men of outstanding executive ability, courage, resourcefulness and successful banking experience.

"Five years ago the first survey of state banking departments by the division demonstrated the need for improvements. On the basis of data now in hand it is evident that, through the revision of statutes in many states, rapid steps are being taken in the right direction. One by one the states are coming to recognize the primary importance of strong, competent banking departments. The demand for increasing the effectiveness of banking departments is beginning to be met."

How Bank Commissioners Are Chosen

The office of bank commissioner is now operated as an independent department of state government in thirty-four states, the bankers find. In two states the bank commissioner is elected at general elections; in one he is appointed from eligible lists of the civil service and in another he is selected by the banks. In one state the bankers' association elects a list of five names from which the governor appoints one as superintendent of banks; in another he is appointed by the State Corporation Commission and in another by the State Banking Board.

"Terms of office of bank commissioners have been lengthened in several states during the last five years," the report says. "In 28 states the term is four years, in one, five years, and in three it is six years and in some the term is indefinite. A short term is condemned on the grounds that the commissioner has insufficient time to become thoroughly conversant with his field work. A longer term permits his rendering useful service through capitalizing his experience. Five years ago the average length of service was less than three years, while now it has risen to five years.

Higher Standards Required

"Signs of an awakening to the necessity of making successful banking experience a qualification for bank commissioner are evident. While eleven states report no banking experience necessary, the majority require experience of this sort, ranging from two to five years. Twelve states now have banking boards, with powers ranging from acting in an advisory capacity to full power over all state banks to issue and reject charters.

"A healthy sign is the number of reports which disclose that the commissioners have full power to appoint bank examiners or that these appointments are made from civil service lists. This power is now granted to the commissioner by twenty-seven states. Three require that selection be from civil service lists. Complaints are still made in a few states of political pressure in the appointment of examiners, but the contrary seems to be true in a growing number of states. The most capable commissioner cannot successfully perform his duties unless he is able to command the services of efficient, honest examiners. The safety of depositors is dependent on their work, and their appointment, fitness and compensation are highly important. The number of examiners has increased 25 per cent in the last five years."

Red Cross Will Not Make Drive for Funds This Year

Because of the dire need for help in Marshall County the executive committee of the Marshall County Chapter of the American Red Cross will not make a formal drive for funds in behalf of the drouth stricken area of the United States but the Committee will gladly receive voluntary contributions. Already individuals have sent in contributions. All such contributions should be sent directly to W. R. Holbrook, Treasurer, Warren, Minnesota. All money sent in will be acknowledged with thanks.

Check-up Ordered

Governor Floyd B. Olson has ordered the rural credit board to make a re-appraisal of the 1,785 foreclosed farms now in its possesson and to push the sale of these to bring about their return as soon as possible to private ownership, he said last week.

He said he will approve the sale of farms at present market values where the bureau cannot obtain from the sale sufficient funds to cover its original loan.

Because of inability to sell some of the lands without a loss on the basis of the original loan, the bureau has been renting a large number of farms, in many cases to the farmer who made the original loan. Under these conditions the farms furnish no taxes and other taxpayer are forced to make up the difference through increased levies, a situation which has become alarming in this community.

Penalty for Delayed Auto Tax Registration is Reduced by Law

The Minnesota Legislature last week passed a bill reducing the penalty for delayed registration of motor vehicles. The penalty is now 25 cents for the first four days and $1.00 per month thereafter, with a maximum of $5.00.

No change was made either in the last day for paying the tax, Feb. 15, nor the last day when cars may be operated with 1930 plates, which is March 31. Operating a car with 1930 plates after March 31 is a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment, and this penalty was not reduced or removed.

The cut in the penalty for late registration was made for the benefit of persons who are out of employment or short of funds, but a Highway bulletin suggests that persons who want to operate their cars should be sure to have their 1931 plates on their cars before April 1. Those who drive, it is felt, can well afford to pay the tax promptly, since this fee is a small part of the cost of running a car, and those who ride should help maintain Minnesota's roads.

The fact that the car is not operated does not relieve the owner of paying the tax eventually. In Minnesota the license tax is in lieu of the personal property tax, and must be paid on all cars in the state. The penalty for late registration, as now fixed, however, is very light, and perons who are temporarily short of funds may license their cars later without a prohibitive penalty. But the law against operating cars with out-of-date plates the bulletin says, will be strictly enforced.

School Notes

High School

Ahlert Johnson has quit school.

Doris Leiran and Kenneth Johnson were absent from high school on Monday.

The six weeks tests have all begun now so the question remains, Who will make the honor-roll this month?

Seventh and Eighth Grades

We have broken the record for Holt, by playing kittenball in February.

Ruth Bottem is back to school again after her cold.

Raymond Hagen has been absent again from school.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

In our Industrial Arts class we are making modern homes. We have to have them completely furnished for spring occupancy.

The 6th grade Geography Class are visiting in Japan this week and are getting samples of tea and rice to bring back.

Florence Bottem has been ill this week and we hope she'll be back again soon.

Third and Fourth Grades

We were all invited up to the 1st and 2d grade room for a Washington program on Monday. We enjoyed it very much.

Visitors last Friday were Genive Larson, Harriet Wahlin and Roy Johnson.

In the vegetable race in the 3d and 4th grade, the onion was the most popular vegetable.

The 4th grade have been making Safety-First posters in the language class.

First and Second Grades

The 1st and 2d grades made flags to represent the February patriots. They have also started to make vases decorated with tulips to hold spring flowers which they expect to see soon.

The 1st grade expect to complere two readers this week, so they will be ready to start two new ones next week.

The 2d grade gave a play "How Fred Earned a Flag," in honor of Washington's birthday. They invited the 3d and 4th grade to enjoy the play.

Faith In Agriculture Expressed By Ass't Sec'y of Agriculture

"I believe that, because of the low prices at which land can be secured, now is the most opportune time we have experienced in 30 years for the procurement of a farm. The young man who wants to follow agriculture should not overlook this wonderful opportunity.

"Agriculture in this country is, always has been, and I believe, always will be, a sound, solvent business.

Practically all of the acceptable farm lands are now under cultivation. Increased population places 4,000 more mouths at Uncle Sam's breakfast table every morning.

"The farmer of the future will most certainly have more reason to be thankful than the farmer of the recent past. There is plenty of evidence to bear out that view.

"The best informed men in the agricultural field are convinced that the next 10 or 15 years will see farming advance into a period of remarkable properity".

Summer Capital?

Minnesota will become the summer capital of the nation if an invitation from the Commercial Club of Pelican Rapids to President Herbert Hoover to spend his vacation at Dunn's Lodge on beautifull Lake Lizzie near that village is accepted.

The invitation of Pelican Rapids businessmen has been supplemented by invitations from the Ten Thousand Lakes-Greater Minnesota Association, the Saint Paul Association and the Minneapolis Civic & Commerce Association. In addition a personal invitation will be extended by Congressman C. G. Selvig of Crookston, in whose district Pelican Rapids is located.

Dunn's Lodge, which is being offerred to the president is one of the largest and most modern places in the state. It is capable of not only caring for the personal needs of President and Mrs. Hoover, but will accommodate all the members of their summer staff as well. Mr. Dunn gratuitously offered the use of his lodge to the Pelican Rapids Commercial club when that organization was seeking a place which would accommodate the presidential party.

Lake Lizzie on which the proposed summer White House is located is approximately two hundred miles northwest of the Twin Cities, and about seven miles from Pelican Rapids. It is noted for its excellent wall-eyed pike and bass fishing. There are also several very good trout streams nearby. The lodge is located in a growth of heavy timber at the edge of a splendid bathing beach.

Township Elections As Usual

The township elections will be held this year the same as usual, no change having been made by the 1929 legislature which changed the date of the village election. Supervisors and other town officers will therefore be elected on Tuesday, March 10.

Without glancing at the document, he commanded her to lay it on the divan; and then he looked both women over again with absorbed attention. Something in the affair seemed to command his interest, and even amused him. Evidently he was solving some riddle, as he sat looking at them in that silent embarrassing way of his, glancing oftener and oftener at Musia as the expression of his eyes hinted that the riddle was clearing up, and that he had found the solution in the young girl's presence. And something like hate and disgust began to characterize his scrutiny of Mrs. Krassin; a little cynical smile curled his lip as he looked at her.

Musia's heart sank; for she seemed to understand by that small disdainful smile that their cause was lost. If he had spoken bruskly his denial, she would not have been more sure—and yet her mother did not seem to feel it. Something in Loris' bold look at her made Musia shrink. "The best thing to do is to go away," said she to herself, watching very keenly their judge who was at the same time their adversary. Her mother had made some mistake, she felt, and everything was spoiled. What that mistake had been she could not conceive; but the fact she apprehended very clearly.

"Who is this young lady?"

Loris shot the question at Mrs. Krassin like a crossexaminer.

"My daughter," replied Mrs. Krassin. "Ilya's sister."

"Why did you bring her here?"

"She—" stammered Mrs. Krassin. "We are both torn by anguish for my son—her brother. We would give anything—life, liberty—I would give my body and my soul to rescue him. He is my life!"

"Yourself—body and soul!" exclaimed Loris, with a bitter and ironic smile. "And," insinuatingly, "I suppose this young lady would be equally liberal in the matter—or you for her?"

There was a movement at the door, as if some one were about to enter. Loris rose, and by gesture as of dismissal brought them to their feet. A soldier came in with a message; and as he crossed the room glanced sharply at the group—the two women standing before the commissar, drooping as from a cutting rebuke, with Mrs. Krassin still holding in her hand the petition.

"Stand aside for a moment!"

The guard obediently stood aside, closely scrutinizing the faces of the others.

"I think I understand you, madame. You are calculating on the impression made by the fine form and pretty face of your daughter. You think the Bolshevik commander amenable to such influences—and you are liberal in your offers, or your suggestions as to carrying out any little arrangement which may be effective. Isn't that so? And I am sure you have something in reserve in your reticule, too—from the manner in which you hold it. You certainly adjust yourself admirably to a difficult situation, and neglect nothing, dear lady!"

The inconceivable brutality of this speech was such that for a moment Musia could scarcely believe that she had heard aright. Then as Loris' attitude forced upon her the certainty that he had made this terrible charge against her mother she grew sick and dizzy, with a feeling that her heart had been physically crushed.

She took her mother by the arm and drew her toward the door. Why did she linger after that? Musia's indignation rose as she saw her mother seemed not to resent the insult; for Mrs. Krassin resisted the urge toward the door, stood fast in this room in which every moment's lingering was a compromise of honor.

"Come," said Musia, "let us go! Let us go!"

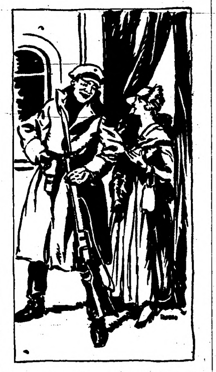
But Mrs. Krassin would not yield. She still stood fast. She seemed to hope for success—some sort of success. Loris turned away and finished with the guard the business upon which he had, ostensibly at least, entered, and all through this space of time Musia was, without success, urging her mother to depart.

"I see," said he, "that the son is the favorite child. Or perhaps you have accepted your own standards as to the comparative value of an enforced step out of the path commended by moralists, if taken by the daughter, with no harm to her life and limb, to save the very life of your son. Well, some important historical characters have taken the same position. How does the thing you had in mind when you brought her here differ from marriage for wealth, or for position? It is really much less of a departure from the straight and narrow path, madame! You need not look so indignant, my dear," turning to Musia. "You may or may not know your own mother and her schemes; but whether you are innocent or not, you are carrying it off admirably—I will say that for you. You add to your value as trading stock! I admit it. You are simply great! Where did you get that face and form? Not from this mother—about whom I am telling you only the simple truth."

In obedience to some instruction which Loris had given to the guard a soldier entered and stood at attention.

"You will wait outside until your daughter joins you!"

A movement of his hand toward the soldier, the keen eye, the lift of the eyebrow, the command of the face told why Loris was a commissar. The soldier stepped forward to lead Mrs. Krassin out of the car.



Musia Was Thrust Back Into the Room by the Leering Soldier.

"One moment!" this to the soldier. "Madame, in parting with you, it will please you to know that the fate of your son is not yet decided. I may add that I am beginning to see a new light upon the case. Such an able argument as yours could not fail to have its effect on the candid mind. Mine is a candid mind! I now feel that I should hear further argument in the matter. But the time which I can give to the subject is unfortunately limited, and your oratory, which, as I have admitted, is able, lacks the merit of brevity. Such appeals as may be made for him in the future must be offered by this fair advocate!"

Musia was thrust back into the room by the leering soldier, who, in obedience to a wave of his commander's hand, took Mrs. Krassin out. The long stay of the two women, the fact that the system of espionage which prevailed among the Bolsheviki had revealed the fact that they were seated in earnest conference with Loris, these things sent a ripple of interest along the lines of information that ran like a network of wires through the Bolshevist organization—to Vilinsky, to Petrov, and on even to Lenine and Trotsky.

But as for Loris' holding the girl in consultation after her mother was excused, and of making public as he had in his speech in the presence of this soldier the fact that Musia must be the intermediary if he heard more in behalf of Ilya—this was quite a different thing from that long confabulation of the three shut in together. This was quite a natural thing. He who ran might read. Even under the dictatorship of the proletariat, thought the soldier, as he stood guard over Mrs. Krassin on the platform, the officers had certain advantages over the common soldiers.

Mrs. Krassin had been led to a bench, but she did not sit down. She stood like a hypnotized person who remains fixed in the posture in which the dominant mind has left her, her skirts pressed against the edge of the bench, her ear turned toward the car in which she had left her daughter, her eyes staring in blank unregardfulness, her reticule containing her jewels in one hand, and her petition to the commissar in the other, a dark and mysterious picture of the chaos in humanity wrought by chaos in society.

Germany Has a Cheap Plane Without a Tail

Berlin.—The Stork, a tailless airplane shaped like an arrowhead with an eight horse power "pusher" engine attached to the rear of its 6-foot-long fuselage, was publicly demonstrated here. The plane, which will retail for $800, was designed by Alexander Lippisch.

The plane's stability will make it possible for any layman to learn to fly it with a few hours instruction, according to Lippisch. In landings vertical rudders are used as brakes and the plane needs only 25 to 35 feet for takeoff, he said.

All the controls are arranged on the wings being operated separately on either side. The absence of a tail and chariot, in addition to aiding the pushing capacity of the propeller, affords aerodynamic advantages that make it possible for the plane to reach a speed of 78 miles an hour despite its low power, an eight horse power engine.

HIS INDUSTRIOUS DAUGHTER

By Fannie Hurst

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

IF THE president of the Colombo Gunnysack Company had ever had time to feel sorry for himself, he might have experienced some righteous qualms of self-pity. As a matter of fact, he did not have time. The small factory of which he was president and treasurer occupied practically all of his waking hours and, alas, too many of the hours that should have been devoted to sleep. It was that kind of business; one that needed incessant coaxing, surveillance and study.

As Tom Clausson's wife Nedda did not hesitate to put it, it was one of those cussedly little businesses that yielded its profits begrudgingly and then only after exacting unremitting toil and worry.

There was plenty to keep Tom Clausson worried. The house on Ulster Street was one of those large, rambling, pretentious affairs that, even with the persons of his three grown daughters and wife in it, required more help than any other home on the street. Nedda, as you would naturally expect of a good and conscientious mother, demanded the best for those three girls and for her son Milton, who, at twenty-one, was still in college.

Nedda had a philosophy of life. That philosophy was that her children were to be reared with the instinct to get something out of life. Whatever of her own experiences, or lack of them, may have gone into this decision, she never divulged. But here was a woman with a formula. Her three daughters and her son were being reared on the principle that life was an orange to be squeezed dry of content. In other words, Nedda Clausson was like a general campaigning the lives of her children. And, strangely enough, campaigning it to their satisfactions.

It kept Tom's nose to the grindstone, no doubt of that. At fifty-five, he looked ten years older and his knees were bent, but his three daughters were college graduates, his son was about to become one, and the big house on Ulster Street was one of the most exclusive social meccas of the city.

Nedda, who privately considered her life a lusterless affair of economic strife, had the satisfaction of seeing her daughters launched with impressive debut.

It had been her misfortune to marry a man destined for only the petty successes of the average. She was determined that her children should not suffer the handicap of such deterring causes.

The three daughters of the Tom Claussons, one by one, made marriages worthy of the ambitions of their mother. The eight years covering the period of those mariages were the most taxing in the life of Tom Clausson.

In its effort to meet the demands put upon it by the burdens of its president, the little gunny-sack factory staggered past one financial crisis after another. There were nights when Tom Clausson, lying beside his wife, did not close his eyes, planning, figuring, manipulating, scheming one more way to tide over what threatened to be a disastrous climax in the financial affairs of the firm.

Indeed, after the marriage of his third daughter, bankruptcy was so narrowly averted that Tom Clausson's hair committed the miracle of turning practically white within a month. And then, to cap that climax, there came upon the house of Clausson what in Nedda's eyes amounted to a blight that obliterated all three successes which she had achieved in her daughters.

Frank Clausson, college senior, eloped with a showgirl. The blow fell on Tom with a finality that was crushing. For years he had looked forward to the time when this boy of his could bring into the business a shoulder to the wheel. Money, hope and affection had been expended upon him. Tom Clausson, who was steeled against complaint, felt despair.

In the end, Nedda Clausson was obliged to rescind her stern refusal ever to permit Frank and his bride to enter the home on Ulster Street. Frank fell ill of pneumonia in the college town where he was trying to earn a precarious living as a haberdasher's clerk and Nedda and Tom were sent for as the situation began to seem critical.

In the end, Frank and his bride returned with the older pair to the house on Ulster Street.

Frank was a fair, frail and magnetic fellow and his wife, named Marigold, was just that. Her prettiness was a perfect kind of thing. It astonished old Tom Clausson. Her bright beauty had a quality to it that he had never before seen. It made the more studied perfection of his daughters pale to the commonplace.

But all in all, the coming home of Frank and his bride was at an unpropitious time for the Claussons. The business, as if reacting from the long strain of years, slumped into what was a chronic precarious state. There were days when black thoughts of suicide actually crossed the tired old brain of Tom Clausson. Nedda did not make things any easier to bear. The homecoming of her daughter-in-law was bitter, humiliating and shameful to her. Social stigma was across the name of a Clausson. Marigold had not only been notorious as a show girl, but she was the daughter of one of the most notorious women in New York. Not even her beauty or her radiance could efface the hatred from the heart of Nedda.

It was not a studied hatred. It is possible that it was not all a conscious hatred. And in the end ironically enough it reacted most cruelly of all upon old Tom.

Nedda, with the sense of superiority that galled and at the same time animated her, set out to impress Marigold with the scale of living of the family into which she had so unwelcomely projected herself.

After the advent of Frank and Marigold into the household, the regime there became more complicated and more ostentatious. There was less entertaining. Nedda was too embarrassed for that, but a new car was added to the several in the garage, fresh flowers blazed throughout the house, and Nedda took frequent trips to town for new and expensive clothes.

It was a curious, twisted reaction that took place in Nedda. She wanted to impress Marigold and yet not to share. Day after day she set out for calls, for bridge, for visits upon her daughters, for this and that recreation without inviting Marigold. Frank's heart bled for his bride. Yet the alacrity with which she set about adapting herself to her uncongenial environment was surprising. It was hard to quarrel with one who held her peace and recognized no slight. It was hard to pick dissonances with one whose capacity for sweetness was without limit.

Marigold was like that. Frank blessed her in his heart, but, with her, kept up the pretense of not noticing.

Tom Clausson, whose quandary and panic grew as his home burdens became inexplicably heavier, even with his daughters married and gone, pretended, too, not to notice.

She could keep playful under a snub, Marigold could. That was part of the wonder of her. No limit to her capacity for nonsense and yet, withal, there were scars across the very being of Marigold. Her life as a child had been cruelly sophisticated. She had seen life in the raw with those clear blue eyes of hers and yet she could laugh as a child laughs.

Tom Clausson, when he could not sleep, used to like to think of that laughter. And more and more he could not sleep. Grave times were about to fall upon him and he knew it. The business was about to crash.

One day, in the midst of those terrifying times, Marigold Clausson sought out her father-in-law in his dingy office in the gunnysack factory. He was a tired old man now and his head had begun to shake with palsy.

"Frank and I," she began without preliminaries, "want to take over the responsibilities of the business. I have succeeded in negotiating a loan for twenty-five hundred dollars, at six per cent. That will avert anything immediate. It'll get us on our feet."

"What do you mean?" said her father-in-law, and looked into her eyes which were as blue as a doll's.

"You needn't be afraid that I am not capable of taking hold. I've been out in the world all my life. I've known nothing but knocks and hardship and struggle. I was a business woman before I went into the theater. I am not afraid of work. Frank has the makings of a business man. I'll make him."

"I'm tired, Marigold," said Clausson and, to his enormous humiliation and surprise, began to cry weakly with tears running down his face.

He was not accustomed to anyone being personal with him.

"I know you are, Father," said Marigold, and laid her hand on his arm, "but nobody seems to have cared enough to notice it. It's time now that you were beginning to get something out of life, as well as the other members of your family. I'm going to see to it."

She did.

Meal Is Prescribed

There is a restaurant in Paris where you cannot order what you want. The waiter positively refuses to take your order. You may notice him standing and studying you closely. Possibly he calls the head waiter and the two converse in low tones, glancing at you every now and then as if they were doctors diagnosing a patient's case.

That is exactly what they are doing. They are not doctors, but food experts and they are discovering from your appearance and your personality exactly what dishes will make the strongest appeal to you. They will eventually give you, not what you think you want, but what they know you will find most delicious.

Ancient Temple

The Angkor-Vat lies a little less than a mile to the south of the ruins of Angkor, Siam, within a park surrounded by a moat, whose outer perimeter measures 6,000 yards. It is now believed that the temple was consecrated to the worship of Buddha. It consists of three stages, connected by exterior staircases, culminating in the sanctuary, a great central tower pyramidal in form. The decoration consists chiefly in the representation of gods, men, and animals which are displayed on every flat surface. The materials employed in construction were sandstone of various colors, without the use of cement and limonite.

Brightest

From three to twelve. That's the most important period in a child's growth. And that's the time many are retarded physically and mentally by energy-sapping constipation.

Watch your child, mother! At the first sign of bad breath, coated tongue, headache, biliousness, lack of energy or appetite, give California Fig Syrup.

This pure vegetable product will cleanse the little bowels without discomfort. It tones and strengthens weak stomach and bowels. In colds or children's diseases, employ its gentle aid to keep the system free from germs and waste.

Mothers everywhere are eager to tell how it helps children. Mrs. H. Mayer, 1737 Marburg St., Dallas, Texas, says: "I have used California Fig Syrup with Danny all his life in colds, biliousness, constipation, upsets, or children's ailments. It keeps him the brightest, happiest six-year-old I know."

DOCTOR'S Prescription gives Bowels Real Help

Train your bowels to be regular; to move at the same time every day; to be so thorough that they get rid of all the waste. Syrup Pepsin—a doctor's prescription—will help you do this. When you take this compound of laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other valuable ingredients, you are helping the bowels to help themselves.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the sensible thing to take whenever you are headachy, bilious, half-sick from constipation. When you have no appetite, and a bad taste or bad breath shows you're full of poisonous matter or sour bile.

Dr. Caldwell studied bowel troubles for 47 years. His prescription always works quickly, thoroughly; can never do you any harm. It just cleans you out and sweetens the whole digestive tract. It gives those overworked bowels the help they need.

Take some Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin today, and see how fine you feel tomorrow—and for days to come. Give it to the kiddies when they're sickly or feverish; they'll like the taste! Your druggist has big bottles of it, all ready for use.

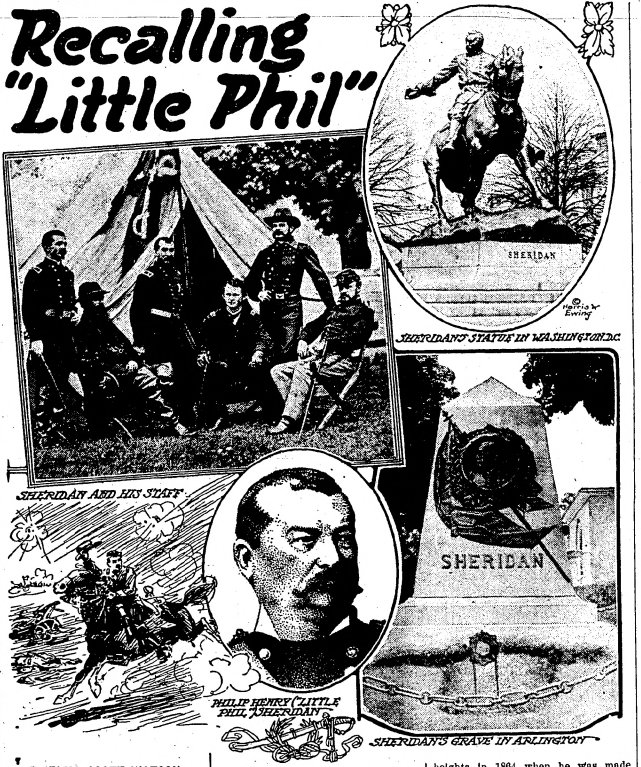
Recalling "Little Phil"



SHERIDAN AND HIS STAFF

PHILIP HENRY ("LITTLE PHIL") SHERIDAN

SHERIDAN'S STATUE IN WASHINGTON D.C.

SHERIDAN'S GRAVE IN ARLINGTON

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS just 100 years ago, March 6, 1831, that there was born to an Irish immigrant couple in Albany, N. Y., a boy who was destined for lasting fame as an American soldier and as one of the great cavalry leaders of all time. Philip Henry Sheridan was his name but American tradition has preserved his memory in two nicknames which his devoted followers gave him—"Fighting Phil" and "Little Phil." And like another horseman of an earlier war, Paul Revere of the Revolution, Phil Sheridan, the dashing cavalryman of the Civil war, owes some of the perpetuation of his name and fame to a poem—Thomas Buchanan Read's "Sheridan's Ride."

While Sheridan was still a child his parents moved to Ohio and settled near Somerset in Perry county. There his boyhood and youth were spent under frontier conditions with its necessity for hard work by all members of the family and its limited opportunities for education. There the characteristics of his later life became evident early. Young Sheridan worked for a country storekeeper for the sum of 50 cents a week, and although his employer testified to the fact that he was a faithful worker, he also commented upon the fact that what time the boy wasn't working he was "talkin' soldier or playin' soldier."

At the age of seventeen Sheridan had the good fortune to secure an appointment to West Point, and although his limited education made the work there unusually difficult for him, he made a fairly good record at the academy. However, he lived up to his "scrappy" reputation by having such a fight with a fellow cadet that he was suspended for a year, and instead of being graduated in the class of 1852, as he should have been, he was not graduated until 1853 and then he stood No. 34 in a class of 52.

Following his graduation and appointment as a second lieutenant in the infantry, Sheridan spent the next eight years in comparative obscurity. He was detailed to service on the frontier and in various parts of the West saw service against the Indians, which not only afforded him good training with the dragoons for his future career as a cavalryman but also gave him an insight into the Indian character which was to be particularly valuable during the Plains wars after the conflict of 1861-65.

The outbreak of the Civil war, however, gave Sheridan his chance to display the genius which was to give him his place among the great cavalry leaders of the world. Detailed first on the staff of General Halleck at St. Louis, he soon attracted attention by his capacity for detail, his energy and his unfailing devotion to duty, and these qualities resulted in his appointment as colonel of the Second Michigan cavalry. Only a few weeks later he was elevated to the grade of brigadier general of the United States Volunteers. That was in 1862, and by the end of the year he had been placed in command of a division and given his commission of major general. And all of this had happened when he was but thirty-two years of age.

Sheridan's record during the first three years of the war was brilliant enough, with his part in the battles at Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga and Chattanooga, but he rose to the heights in 1864 when he was made chief of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac and started upon his famous campaign in the Shenandoah valley of Virginia. There his problem was to checkmate another brilliant cavalry leader, Gen. Jubal A. Early of the Confederate army, and to devastate this rich country so that it could no longer feed the Confederate army.

It was during this campaign that the incident occurred which inspired Read's famous poem and gave rise to one of those popular legends so dear to the heart of Americans—and so filled with inaccuracies as to historical fact! That legend tells how Sheridan at Winchester, hearing heavy firing in the direction of Cedar Creek, where his army was stationed, suspected something was wrong, sprang to the back of his coal black charger, "Winchester," and made a mad dash of 20 miles to find his army being routed by Early's surprise attack. Then, according to the school book histories, "Swinging his hat, he dashed along the line of battle, shouting 'Never mind, boys, we'll whip them yet.' The 'boys' responded by throwing up their caps and hurrahing with the wildest joy. Before night set in they drove Early out of the Valley."

A reference to Sheridan's "Personal Memoirs" and other standard authorities, however, will show that the legend can stand considerable correction. In the first place Sheridan did not ride any 20 miles, as the poet has him doing. It is only 13 miles from Winchester to Cedar Creek and he had his first view of his disorganized army at Mill Creek, less than a mile from Winchester. From there to the actual "front" it was not much more than nine or ten miles. Nor was his ride made alone nor covered at top speed all the way, as the poet would have us believe. He was accompanied by two of his aides-de-camp, Maj. George A. Forsythe and Capt. Joseph O'Keefe and at various places along the route of his progress toward the enemy he paused long enough to give orders to various officers about rallying the retreating Union troops. As for the "Turn, boys, turn! We're going back!" type of exclamation so often attributed to Sheridan, these words from his "Memoirs" speak for themselves: "I said nothing except to remark as I rode among those on the road: 'If I had been with you this morning this disaster would not have happened. We must face the other way; we will go back and recover our camp.'"

Although Sheridan is known to more Americans because of this incident than any other in his career, that career continued long after the Civil war. It included service on the Mexican border in the days when the Maximilian incident was a threat to our peaceful relations with European countries, during the Indian wars on the plains when he was in command of the operations which finally brought about the subjugation of the warlike tribes, as guest observer on the staff of King William during the Franco-Prussian war and as commander in chief of the United States army after the retirement of Sherman. Sheridan died in 1888 at the age of fifty-seven years with the rank of full general, a grade which had been restored by congress that year in his favor.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE

Up from the south at break of day,
Bringing to Winchester fresh dismay,
The affrighted air with a shudder bore,
Like a herald in haste, to the chieftain's door,
The terrible grumble, and rumble, and roar,
Telling the battle was on once more,
And Sheridan twenty miles away.

And wider still those billows of war
Thundered along the horizon's bar;
And louder yet into Winchester rolled
The roar of that red sea uncontrolled,
Making the blood of the listener cold,
As he thought of the stake in that fiery fray,
And Sheridan twenty miles away.

But there is a road from Winchester town,
A good, broad highway leading down:
And there, through the flush of the morning light,
A steed as black as the steeds of night
Was seen to pass, as with eagle flight;
As if he knew the terrible need,
He stretched away with his utmost speed;
Hills rose and fell, but his heart was gay,
With Sheridan fifteen miles away.

Still sprang from those swift hoofs, thundering south,
The dust, like smoke from the cannons' mouth,
Or the trail of a comet, sweeping faster and faster,
Foreboding to traitors the doom of disaster.
The heart of the steed and the heart of the master
Were beating like prisoners assaulting their walls,
Impatient to be where the battlefield calls;
Every nerve of the charger was strained to full play,
With Sheridan only ten miles away.

Under his spurning feet, the road
Like an arrowy Alpine river flowed,
And the landscape sped away behind
Like an ocean flying before the wind;
And the steed, like a bark fed with furnace ire,
Swept on, with his wild eye full of fire;
But, lo! he is nearing his heart's desire;
He is snuffing the smoke of the roaring fray,
With Sheridan only five miles away.

The first that the general saw were the groups
Of stragglers, and then the retreating troops;
What was done? What to do? A glance told him both,
Then, striking his spurs, with a terrible oath,
He dashed down the line, 'mid a storm of huzzas,
And the wave of retreat checked its course there, because
The sight of the master compelled it to pause.
With foam and with dust the black charger was gray;
By the flash of his eye, and the red nostril's play,
He seemed to the whole great army to say:
"I have brought you Sheridan all the way
From Winchester town to save the day!"

Hurrah! hurrah for Sheridan!
Hurrah! hurrah for horse and man!
And when their statues are placed on high,
Under the dome of the Union sky,
The American soldier's Temple of Fame,
There, with the glorious general's name,
Be it said, in letters bold and bright:
"Here is the steed that saved the day
By carrying Sheridan into the fight,
From Winchester — twenty miles away!"

—THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

How to Escape FLU

1. Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.
2. Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.
3. Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.
4. Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle; this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.
5. If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

Many a woman is a martyr to her husband's dyspepsia.

Quick COMFORT for fretful upset children

ALL children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely; good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.

Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give it to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown!

For sale by all druggists. Be sure to get the genuine product with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper, and this familiar name-plate:

CASTORIA

Inside and Outside

"Baseball used to have a lot of inside play." "Now they simply knock the ball outside the lot."

THE THINKER LEADS MODERN PROGRESS

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association

John G. Lonsdale

THE greatest need of the world today is interpreters of our times—modern Daniels in agriculture, finance, politics, industry—who can see through the fog and haze that enshroud our difficult problems and advise, instruct, and influence those who are either indifferent or limited in their perceptions.

Through the thinker and the interpreter, unknown situations are disclosed or puzzling conditions explained in logical light. The American people are so constituted that they can meet and combat any situation once it is known and understood. It is the unknown that comes like the thief in the night and brings disaster.

Some one has defined prosperity as something the business men create for the politicians to take credit for. But America's present-day prosperity can be defined as a product resulting from the business man's ability to study and to interpret. Huge corporations maintain research staffs and special bureaus to interpret the times for them. Disaster looms in the offing for any industry that goes blithely on its way day after day without due regard to significant trends in trade and business.

Keeping Up With Change

Leaders of finance have discovered that they cannot remain passive in an age when all the rest of the world is in a transitional stage. The modern banker not only must know about the changing styles in other lines of business, but above all must be alert to the transformations which are taking place in his own. He must be a man of keener, broader vision, because the order of the day is for larger units of service. Mergers and consolidations have taken place in great numbers. We now talk of billions where a few years ago we talked of millions.

We have only begun our changes. What disposition is to be made of the many problems that they bring will depend in large measure upon our leaders, upon the students and the interpreters who can read accurately the signs of the times, so that we may base future actions and hopes upon their wisdom. The quickest way to go to the top is to go to the bottom of things, and let us hope that among them will be found many who will not only aspire to leadership but will be successful in reaching their goal.

A ST. PATRICK'S DAY DINNER

WHY not "pig together" this St. Patrick's Day? This is an old Irish expression for inviting one's neighbors in for roast pig and festivities on their beloved March 17—and for real spontaneous fun we have yet to find a better holiday for entertaining. Anything goes at a St. Patrick's dinner.

Your living room will take on an Emerald Isle atmosphere with the lights softened by green shamrock shades and the bowls filled with green carnations. A rack full of clay pipes beside the fireplace will provide after-dinner smokes when the guests sit before the blaze and tell their best Pat-and-Mike stories.

Games—if your guests are the game sort—may be as un-grown-up as you please. Men like an excuse to play marbles, and since this is a typical Irish street-gamin game, you might supply each guest with a green net bag of marbles and organize the guests into groups to play marbles "for keeps." The heaviest-winner should be so elated with his success that he will be willing to do a "stunt" for the losers—like shooting an exhibition game.

Table Decorations

By all means buy some green-and-white checkered gingham cloth and make a cover for your dining-table. You will find it is most decorative and also gives the keynote of informality. And since no one ever quite outgrows a love for castles, why not build an Irish castle for a center-piece?

It can be simply constructed with cardboard and covered with crepe-paper which comes in stone-wall design. Vari-colored lights gleaming from wax-paper windows give a fascinating color-effect which may be supplemented for actual lighting requirements by green candles in potato holders.

The place-cards may be tagged to tiny pots of growing shamrocks, but be sure to leave space above the name for each guest to write his own limerick, the last lines of which must rhyme with his name—whether it be Jones or Paderewski.

And now as to eats—because all sons of St. Pat have a soft spot in their hearts or stomachs or somewhere for food. Doesn't this green menu strike you as good to eat as well as to look at?

Cream of Asparagus Soup
Croutons
Baked Spinach Souffle
Broiled Squab on Toast
Potato Croquettes with Mint Jelly
Dressed Water Cress
Shamrock Rolls
Radishes Olives
Tipperary Tarts
Salted Pistachio Nuts
Green Bon Bons

It's a menu that is really simple to prepare and if you'll don your Dublin apron in the morning, you can have things almost ready prepared so there'll just be finishing touches when the guests arrive.

You can use the canned asparagus soup because it is most delicate in flavor, and it may be party-fied by simply topping with whipped cream and serving with croutons. Whip the cream beforehand, of course, and place next to the ice.

Baked Spinach Souffle is made by preparing a white sauce with five melted tablespoons of butter blended with five and one-half tablespoons flour, adding two cups milk and cooking until smooth and creamy. Four cups of boiled or canned spinach should be finely chopped and added to the white sauce with three tablespoons butter and four eggs which have been beaten until light. Season with salt and a little paprika. Pour into buttered molds and set in a pan of hot water. Bake for one hour in an oven 350 degrees F.

Other Irish Foods

Mint Jelly: Dissolve three and one-half tablespoons gelatin in one-half cup cold water and pour over the gelatin a syrup made of two cups of water and one and one-half cups sugar. Steep fresh, washed mint leaves in a cup of boiling water for an hour. Squeeze through a piece of cheese-cloth and press out all of the moisture. Add this mint to the gelatin and sugar mixture and add also a tablespoon of lemon juice.

Tipperary Tarts may be made in the morning and served cold for dessert. Combine a No. 2 can of apple sauce with one-half cup sugar, the juice and grated rind of one lemon and four well-beaten egg yolks. Fold in the four stiffly-beaten egg whites. Line small tart or muffin tins with pastry; fill with the mixture and bake, having the oven hot at first until the crust is well set, then reducing the heat. When done remove from the oven; sprinkle a little grated cheese over each tart while it is still hot.*

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher.   Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, March 6, 19. 1.   Volume 20; Number 45.

Times Change

There are still left, around Holt, quite a few who can remember that along back 40 years ago beer was five cents a glass and lunch was free. Eggs were three dozen for a quarter, and milk was three cents a quart. The butcher gave liver for the cat and treated the kids to bologna. The hired girl was satisfied with $2 a week and did the washing. Women did not powder or paint, smoke, play bridge or bob their hair. The men wore boots, whiskers, chewed tobacco, spit on the side walks, worked eleven hours a day and never went on strike. Kerosene lamps and photo albums in the parlors were luxuries. No one was operated on for appendicitis or bought monkey glands to restore their youth. The youngsters had some work to do, walked miles to school, wore cotton flannels, minded their parents and were satisfied with what they had. Folks lived to a good old age, and when they did die an automobile had nothing whatever to do with it.

But today its different. Now everybody rides in outor or airplanes, plays poker and bridge, shoots craps, plays the piano with both feet instead of their hands, goes to the movies, smokes cigarettes, drinks "white mule," wears silks, "bellyaches" about hard times and blames the hard times on whatever party happens to be in power. They never go to bed the same day they get up, and yet think they are having a wonderful time. This is the age of telephones, telegraphs, suffragettes, profiteers, gunmen, highjackers, boyish bobs, bootleggers excess taxes, prohibition, step-ins and step-outs—and we think we're going some.

McMurray Bros. To Have Sale

McMurray Brothers who have been doing fine work the past few years in raising purebred Holstein cattle, have now got so large a herd that they have decided to sell twenty head of these purebred registered Holsteins.

The sale will be held on their place six miles east of Holt on the graveled highway on Saturday, March 14th, at 1 o'clock.

Since they started farming here they have kept the best cows that it was possible for them to raise and have during the past sold many head to stockmen and dairy farmers in this part of the state and No. Dak.

Animals from this herd exhibited at the county fairs and state fair have won many ribbons and prizes.

Muskrats Not To Be Taken

Owing to the shortage of musk rats, as shown in seventy-five per cent of the reports received from the game wardens, there will be no open season for the taking of muskrats during the spring of 1931, says a recent announcement by the state game and fish commissioner. The commissioner adds that he believes the taking of muskrats at this time would result in the practical extermination of the rats, as there are so few of them.

Veterans Loan Bill Passed

Congress has passed a bill, the provisions of which increase the loan value of veterans certificates to 50 per cent of the face value of such certificates. World war veterans may borrow half the amount of their bonus at 4½ per cent interest. The loan value under previous laws was 22½ per cent. It was estimated that about half the veterans will borrow money on their certificates.

"Know What Your Cows Are Doing"

When you begin to make a careful study of what your cows are doing; according to the production of each individual cow, and what each one eats, you are on the right road to successful dairying.

Give each cow a name or number, keep a record of what she eats, and how much she gives. If you don't care to join a testing association or are out of the territory of one, bring your milk in to your butter-maker to have it tested. He will be glad to do it for you and give you advice about feeding your cows.

Study your cows and watch your profits grow.

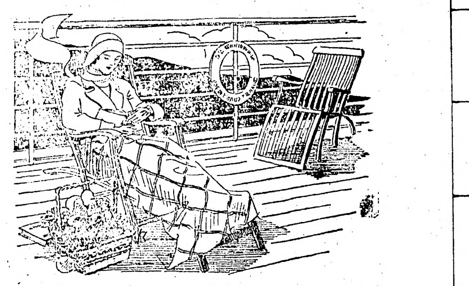
Steamer Baskets



WAY out in mid-ocean, sitting on deck with hours of leisure and miles of blue skies and water before you—isn't it a glorious feeling to open a steamer basket from some one back home? Delving down into a gay reed basket you pull out tiny jars of marmalade, treasure chest tins filled with assorted candies, a glistening package tied with gauzy ribbon that yields dates and figs, another candy tin which yields a mint assortment—endless interesting wee bundles—and what is this rather bulky package not professionally wrapped but somehow more interesting than all the rest? Homemade goodies! Far away from home, it is the very best of all.

Week-End Boxes, Too

When you pack that steamer basket for some friend, don't forget cookies, or cakes or candies which you made yourself. Even for the week-end box which makes the most graceful gift to the hostess, a date loaf cake, a jar of fruit cookies, or a box of nut panoche gives a personal note.

Here is a delicious cooky recipe which can be packed in a pretty tin box, tied with a maline bow and will hold first place in the week-end box or steamer basket.

Cocoanut Burs: Cream one-third cup of shortening and three-fourths cup of sugar, add one well-beaten egg, then one-third cup of canned raspberries mashed, but not sieved. Add one and one-half cups of pastry flour, one and one-half teaspoons of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoon of soda and one-fourth teaspoon of salt. Add one cup of bran and one cup of moist cocoanut and chill. Drop by small spoonfuls on a greased pan, about two inches apart. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for about ten minutes. This makes three and one-half dozen cookies.*

OLDER PEOPLE Must watch bowels Constantly!

As we grow older the bowels become more sluggish. They don't get rid of all the waste. Some days they do not move at all. So older people need to watch their bowels constantly. Only by doing this can they hope to avoid the many forms of sickness caused by constipation.

When your bowels need help remember a doctor should know what is best for them, and get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin from your drugstore. Syrup Pepsin is a doctor's prescription for lagging bowels, good for all ages.

No restriction of habits or diet is necessary while taking Syrup Pepsin. Made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other valuable ingredients, it is absolutely safe. It will not gripe, sicken or weaken you.

Take a spoonful next time your tongue is coated, or you have a bad taste in your mouth. It clears up a bilious, headachy, dull, weak, gassy condition every time. When you see how good it tastes and how nice it acts, you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative for every member of the family.

CHAPTER X

The Petition Rebels

Vilinsky would not have known Loris at that moment; for he was no longer the calm and self-contained person who had for so long steered his course safely through the wild currents of the stormy sea of the revolution. Loris stood for a few moments looking down at the sweet bit of Russian nobility which had been placed in his power—nobody can account for those things; his impassivity was suddenly swept away. An hour before, or the day after, it might not have happened.

"My dear," said he, approaching her, his hands and his lips trembling, a strange unmirthful smile on his face, "you are just wonderful! Fate has sent you to me! I need comfort and solace—and you are exactly that!"

He slipped his arm about her waist, while she stood like a charmed bird. She could not believe that he could do such a thing to her—not this man, who looked so much like the men she knew. It had been different with Vilinsky—he was a loathsome beast; but it was incredible that such a man as this could offer her such an indignity—her, Musia Krassin, who had been respected as something lofty all her life.

The passage between Loris and her mother had been unintelligible to her. For it was her mother! She could not take in at once the dread implication that Loris believed that her mother had made such a degrading surrender of some point of honor which she did not quite visualize. That mother's indescribable stammering admissions of whatever charges Loris was making against her—Musia was not as naive as her mother insisted in believing her; but she was too pure and innocent to apprehend or comprehend all that this meant.

She stood still as a charmed bird as Loris put his arm about her waist, and stooped to kiss her; but as the little curled mustache brushed her pale lips, she stiffened, turned, escaped from the encircling arm, and in a second stood facing him, her cheeks crimson with anger, her breast heaving with agitation.

He stood, still smiling that strange little smile, his hands quivering as he stretched them out to her. She turned scornfully, her glance passing the place where he stood as though he were a bit of furniture, and moved with unhasting dignity toward the door.

"Oh, no!" he half whispered. "Not so soon, my darling! Not when our acquaintance is only beginning! Not with the advantage all on your side. I will not harm you, little dear!"

He had placed himself across the doorway, barring her way out. She turned and looked around for a way of escape; and her eyes fell on the pistols, swords, knives and daggers hanging all over the walls. Quick as light, she snatched a Japanese sword from its carved ivory sheath, and, thus armed, faced her peril, moving toward the door.

"Would you!" exclaimed Loris. "You fine creature!"

And in speaking he closed with his little opponent, deftly twitched the weapon from her hand, and pushed her to a seat on the divan, where she sat, shaking as with an ague.

It was most pitiful. Loris sat down beside her, but at a respectful distance, sheathing the sword.

"They say," said he, "that this edge will cut a silk handkerchief falling upon it through the air. Even when wielded by that little hand, I imagine that it would affect the health of a Bolshevik very seriously. Now, please be calm. I really mean it, now, when I say I will not harm you."

She looked in his eyes for a moment, and saw a changed expression there. She saw inquiry there now, mingled with respect.

"Let me go!" she said pleadingly.

"Presently," said he quietly. "So you were not taken into your mother's confidence when she laid her plan?"

Musia sat mute.

"I do not need to ask," he went on, pointing to the ivory scabbard. "This is my answer."

"It is not true!" She flamed up in her denial. "My mother is incapable of such a thing."

"I once thought," he replied, "that I was incapable of many things. In these days we are all the time discovering new things within the range of our capabilities. That is what the trouble is."

"My mother could not—"

"But your brother?" he queried. Afterward she remembered that he said it very gently. "To save your brother?"

"My brother," said she, looking him in the face, "would a thousand times rather go to execution."

"And be snuffed out by a firing squad," he said. "A man is dead a long, long time."

"You"—she was growing more confident now—"you cannot mean what you—what you seem to say! I know better!"

He sat for a long time looking down at his military boots. For an interview of such exciting inception and of developments so tragic in their possibilities, the affair was becoming rather quiet, with the advantage still shifting to Musia's side. How much he was like the young men with whom she had played about in the old days—and just now, she was about to plunge that sword into his body!

"I must not keep you here much longer," said he, looking into her eyes with a sort of frankness which she remembered with surprise afterward. "I owe you amends for what has just happened. I do not believe you can understand it now, but sometime you will. . . . You must not think that a commissar of the dictatorship of the proletariat is an eastern despot, to give and take life at pleasure. I cannot say anything about your brother's case. I cannot promise to do anything about it. I can only promise to look into it. I am . . . but there is no use in telling you of my troubles. If you wish to follow up the case of your brother, you may come again—if you dare."

"I dare!"

She looked up at him with half a smile on her face; the advantage now was quite with her.

"I wish there were something more dangerous than coming here," she went on, "which I might do to save him. Oh, sir, if there is anything you can do for poor Ilya, do it, and command my grateful prayers forever!"

"And what does 'poor Ilya' call his little sister?" he asked.

"Usually," she replied, "he calls me Musia—sometimes Maroosia."

He wrote the name down in his memorandum book.

"I can promise nothing," said he, "not even that I shall be here—or anywhere—when you come again. But remember this: you must say nothing of what has taken place here to anyone—especially to your mother. I do not care to have it echoing about the Krassin whispering gallery."

Musia reddened. Whenever her mind was recalled to her mother, she felt a passion of shame and indignation swelling higher. Now it overcame her; and she bowed her head in her hands and sobbed. Rising and moving to the door, she turned and spoke.

"I have no longer a mother," said she.

He bowed her out of the door respectfully. As she went out, the next in line, a wrinkled peasant woman, passed her on her way into the tiger's den. As she brushed her way past Musia, she looked up and noted the traces of tears, the signs of agitation, and smiled meaningly.

She wished that her petition could be presented by one so young and fresh and pretty.

Salt Tax Is Old One

Modern Europe, it is commonly believed, inherited the salt tax from the Orient, or possibly from the Venetians who became noted makers and vendors of the sea-born commodity. France had vast natural stores of it, and was among the first nations of the western world to tax it. That resented impost, the gabelle du sel, or tribute of salt, was one of the causes of the French revolution, so heavily did the peasant have to pay the kings for a little seasoning in his pot.

Germany Has a Cheap Plane Without a Tail

Berlin.—The Stork, a tailless airplane shaped like an arrowhead with an eight horse power "pusher" engine attached to the rear of its 6-foot-long fuselage, was publicly demonstrated here. The plane, which will retail for $800, was designed by Alexander Lippisch.

The plane's stability will make it possible for any layman to learn to fly it with a few hours instruction, according to Lippisch. In landings vertical rudders are used as brakes and the plane needs only 25 to 35 feet for takeoff, he said.

All the controls are arranged on the wings being operated separately on either side. The absence of a tail and chariot, in addition to aiding the pushing capacity of the propeller, affords aerodynamic advantages that make it possible for the plane to reach a speed of 78 miles an hour despite its low power, an eight horse power engine.

NOT A DRAB STORY

By Fannie Hurst

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THIS may seem a drab story. Certainly it is not a gilded romance of life lived in the gayer moods of things-as-they ought-to-be. But since the heart is the source from which life drains its happiness and the heart of Ella was in its own way to find its own fulfillment, what may seem drab to the outsider was not that to this slim, sometimes grim girl.

There is no doubt that she was one of those persons born to carry more than her share of the world's responsibility. At seventeen, she was earning half the upkeep and expense of her home which consisted of a five-room flat in a two-family house on a presentable street. This she shared with her mother, a gay, rather childish woman who had never caught up with her years, and with her father, a building contractor, who was, even then, beginning to lose his sight.

From the point of view of many of her friends, Ella's mother was a trial sufficient to tax her endurance beyond limit. She was an airy person of rather good Eastern family connections who had never become reconciled to what she regarded as the cruder aspects of Middle-West life. The city in which she lived bored her. There was an air of patronage about the little lady.

Her habit was to lie abed mornings, leaving her daughter and husband, both of whom she adored, to scuttle about the kitchen for breakfast before they hurried away to work. More than often she waited for them to prepare the evening meal when they came from their work. She was the sort of woman who willfully creates within herself inefficiency, thereby at the same time forcing those about her to acquire skill at chores which would naturally be outside their realm.

There was no reason why Ella and her father should have been carrying on their business lives and at the same time carrying on their shoulders the responsibilities of the home. But that was the case. It had been, ever since Mrs. Lee was married to her husband and ever since Ella was tall enough to stand shoulder-high to a kitchen sink.

John Lee, long ago reconciled to this unequal balance of power in his home, and devoted in spite of himself to this airy little woman, his wife, carried on stodgily, relentless in his routine, even when the grim fear of impending blindness began to descend upon him.

At seventeen, Ella Lee, too old for her years, was assistant in a dentist's office. She was a quiet girl, far too slender, with a mouse-like face, taupe-colored hair which in a bobbed-hair age she wore in two mats against her ears. In Mrs. Lee's eyes, Ella, in her thin, pallid way, bore the imprints of the aristocracy of the world "back East," a semi-mythical world by now, which Mrs. Lee's imagination had embroidered as the years marched on. She was fond of visualizing grandeurs of her girlhood back East that had never existed. In all sincerity, she cherished the belief that she had made the supreme social sacrifice in marrying John Lee and migrating to this Middle-Western city.

Meanwhile, endowed with the sometimes surprising vitality of the slender in body, Ella began to assume more and more the affairs of that household. Inevitably, there came the day when her father, blind, parsimoniously pensioned by the corporation that had employed him for the forty middle years of his life, was obliged to surrender his activities. It meant a severe kind of pinching for the household. Only the facts that Ella, through a stroke of incredible good fortune, obtained a better-paying position in the office of a nose-and-throat specialist, and that a newspaper advertisement had brought in a lodger for the best room in the flat, were the Lees able to make both ends meet.

It was hard, rutty sledding for a while, and it looked as if Ella's frail shoulders could scarcely bear the load. First, her father, along with the collapse of his eyesight, suffered a nervous breakdown. Then, for one reason or another, the lodger they had been able to obtain left almost without warning for reasons that had no bearing upon satisfaction or dissatisfaction at the Lees'.

Mrs. Lee, ineffectual as ever, tried to put her shoulder to the wheel; tried her hand at making fancy candies for the Woman's Exchange and even attempted to do a bit of sewing for the neighbors. But it was no use; she was a futile, spoiled woman. And much of this condition was due to Ella herself. She babied her mother, catered to her inefficiencies and willingly assumed a load that might have staggered a far more robust person.

Her father, feeble in strength, nervously gone in resistance, and tormented by the first years of learning his lesson of reconciliation to blindness, came slowly and unconsciously to demand more and more of Ella. The fact that she was carrying a load that not only obscured her youth but jeopardized her health, failed to make its impression on him. He only knew that he loved her and needed her; that she was indispensable to his darkness and irreplaceable in his plight.

The pathos of this gaunt old man, empty-eyed, empty-handed, was almost more than she could bear. No labor of love was too much. She got up at dawn because he was sleepless then, and she could give to him the few precious hours before her departure from the house. Her return from the physician's office where she was employed was made in breathless, hurried fashion so that she might give to him a few extra moments before the preparation of dinner. Throughout all this, Mrs. Lee, well-meaning, bleeding sympathy for her husband, agonizing for her daughter, succeeded only in making herself more and more of an impediment.

Her cooking was so bad. Time and time again the luncheons which she served to her husband while Ella was at her work came scorched and tasteless to the table, irritating the nervous old man almost beyond endurance. Finally, it became Ella's chore, before she left the house in the morning, to prepare her father's lunch, place it in the icebox and leave written instructions to her little scatter-brained mother precisely how the food should be warmed.

"Poor Ella," said the neighbors, "I don't see how she stands it."

Neither did Ella, for that matter, but fortunately there was not much time to wonder about it.

The days were all too short for what she had to accomplish during them; the nights all too brief for the amount of sleep her tired body required.

The matter of lodgers, one of their major sources of income by now, was a troublesome and nerve-racking one. It was not that they did not seem satisfied, but almost invariably, once they obtained one, he or she would be called out of the city on the death of a relative or a change of position or some incident over which they had no control.

A young man named Nestus Nevins was to be the ultimate lodger who remained. He was a shell-shocked fellow of about thirty-two who found himself, because of physical disabilities, forced to live on an income which amounted to about ninety dollars a month. The capital representing this money had been left him by his parents, in trust, when he was only nineteen. It required care and discretion, in this day and age, to live on it.

He was a pale-eyed, timid fellow, by no means unintelligent, but a boy whose delicate health, both in childhood and later, owing to shell shock, had developed certain inhibitions and a lack of aggressiveness. He liked books and was capable of lying five or six hours of the day and reading. He was not averse to puttering about his room, trying his hand at composition and writing or doing a bit of carpentry for Mrs. Lee, throughout the long bright days, without so much as leaving the house.

He was the first young man who had ever cast a second glance at Ella. Over night, as it were, here life had taken on a turbulence. Excitement for this pale, lustreless girl that was without precedent in her entire experience. The days had come flamingly alive. Everything had taken on a significance that it had never claimed before. It was one thing to be just alive. It was another thing to waken to days that suddenly were tipped with the strange beauty of a strange meaning.

Mrs. Lee saw it happening. She saw the young Nestus begin to cast the magnetized eye of attraction upon her child. Strange tumults beat in her. She was the mother ambitious for her offspring. Romance had come even for Ella who, somehow, up to now, had seemed immune.

It was a strange enough courtship. The pallid youth, lying around the house all day, only perking up enough strength to put on his collar and smooth his hair as the hour of Ella's home-coming approached. Evenings, they sat in the stuffy little parlor, Ella reading to her father, or the four of them, aided and abetted by a system which Ella had worked out for the blind man, playing bridge.

The moments of the young people alone together were so rare and sporadic that when the engagement of their troth finally came, Mrs. Lee, for the life of her, could not figure out where and how the words of tryst could have taken place. But they had.

Ella and Nestus were married in the little parlor one Sunday afternoon so that the occasion need not interfere with her office work.

The household goes on as before, only there is the addition of Nestus Nevins now, who, in his way, is as much to be babied as Mrs. Lee or her husband.

But this is not a drab story. Ella, in her squirrel cage of service, is happy.

Gardens on the Mountainside

Negotiating the Jungfrau from Interlaken, and especially at Eigerglotscher or other wayside stations of that mountain's wonderful railroad, visitors are amazed at the wild flowers, many of which are anything but wild when they grow in our sheltered gardens and hothouses. Right up to the snow line and the rim of the glaciers you will find alpenrosen, as they call our azaleas; violets, forget-me-nots, foxgloves, thistlebloom, anemones, gentians, clover and cornflowers, if that is what you call "bachelor buttons." The far-famed Edelweis is rarely seen here, fortunately for tourists, for as the old guides will tell you, it grows in soft rock and brittle slopes, which are dangerous to climbers.

EXCESS ACID SICKENS—GET RID OF IT!

Sour stomach, indigestion, gas, usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. Food sours in the stomach.

Correct excess acid with an alkali. The best form of alkali is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It works instantly. The stomach becomes sweet. Your heartburn, gas, headache, biliousness or indigestion has vanished!

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the pleasant way—the efficient way to relieve the effects of over-acidity.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia has been standard with doctors for over 50 years. 25c and 50c bottles at druggists.

Safe

Young Robert's mother observed him playing with a large fisheye button in his mouth.

"Take that button out of your mouth, Robert," she ordered. "If you should get it down your throat it would choke you."

"No, mother, this button wouldn't choke me," said the boy. "It has ventilators through it."

Avoid Burns from Mustard Plasters

When you have Rheumatic or Muscular Pains in the back, chest or limbs or if you have a cold coming on, try this simple treatment. It is more convenient, safer, cleaner and more effective than mustard plaster.

Get a bottle of Hoff's Liniment and apply it with brisk rubbing. Then saturate a cloth with Hoff's and apply to the painful area and in a few minutes you will feel the warming and stimulating effect of this powerful liniment.

Hoff's is different from ordinary liniments that are applied with rubbing alone. It brings a quick flow of blood to the affected area, reducing congestion and relieving pain. Get an eight ounce bottle of your druggist today for 60 cents. If you do not get relief in 30 minutes he is authorized to refund your money. Goodrich-Gamble Company, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Now the Fox Rustler

The cattle rustler may be passing, but another form of rustling has developed in the West—fox rustling. Idaho fox growers have been troubled by thieves who cut their way into pens and steal foxes worth thousands of dollars. The latest and largest theft was that of fifteen silver foxes and seven blue foxes, worth $3,000.

Strongest

"Gerald suffered with his stomach and bowels until he was listless and weak," says Mrs. B. E. Geren, 822 W. Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla. "Now he's the strongest boy I know. I gave him California Fig Syrup because Mother used it. It increased his appetite, regulated his bowels, helped his digestion."

Nothing could be more convincing than the way thousands of mothers are praising California Fig Syrup to show how it acts to build-up and strengthen headachy, bilious, half-sick, constipated children.

Your doctor will approve the use of this pure vegetable product as often as impure breath, coated tongue, listlessness or feverishness warn of constipation—or to keep bowels open in colds or children's diseases.

Long Lawsuit Ended

The republic of France has just won a long, drawn-out civil suit against two of its lowly communes which disputed the state's ownership of 22,230 acres of worthless dunes situated in the two communes. The local authorities brought forth documents dating to the Fifteenth century, but the government won its case.

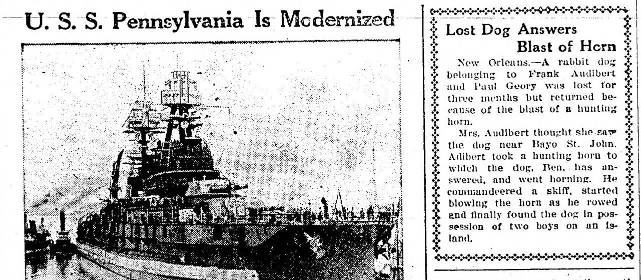
U. S. S. Pennsylvania Is Modernized



The battleship Pennsylvania has been completely modernized at the Philadelphia navy yard. As the photograph shows, the old cage masts have been supplanted by massive tripod masts. The turret guns have been elevated, heavier armor put on, new fire control installed and many other changes made.

Lost Dog Answers Blast of Horn

New Orleans.—A rabbit dog belonging to Frank Audibert and Paul Geory was lost for three months but returned because of the blast of a hunting horn.

Mrs. Audibert thought she saw the dog near Bayo St. John. Adibert took a hunting horn to which the dog, Ben, has answered, and went horning. He commandeered a skiff, started blowing the horn as he rowed and finally found the dog in possession of two boys on an island.

Ruins Tell of Viking Empire

Explorations in Present Baltic States Reveal Interesting Historic Facts.

Stockholm.—Archeological research in the Baltic states continues to add supporting evidence to the theory that a powerful "Viking empire" was in process of forming in these regions more than a thousand years ago. It grows increasingly apparent that the whole Baltic littoral was more closely knit together by trade and communication than indicated by history as written in the past.

Important facts are also being supplied regarding the period of the great migrations and the southward wanderings of the Goths in the Fifth and Sixth centuries. In all the excavations specialists are stressing the need for co-operation. This idea was emphasized at Riga, at the Baltic archeological congress, near the close of the summer, the first congress of the kind to assemble since 1912. And the idea will dominate in all accomplishment before the next congress, which is to be held in Kiel in 1934.

Tells of Buried Treasure.

In Sweden the two seemingly inexhaustible reserves of soil awaiting the spade and the measuring rod are the islands of Gothland, nearly midway in the Baltic sea, and Oland, just off the Swedish mainland on the southeast coast. Not that the horizontal area is so wide reaching. But on the island of Gothland, for instance, the excavation of the foundation of some ancient house or fort or cathedral may reveal traces of an earlier foundation beneath it and one still earlier beneath the second. Such is the case, as disclosed by this summer's work on the southern tip of the island, where Dr. John Nihlen, with a corps of workers, excavated an old "homestead," which legend attributed to Stavar the Great, a heroic figure dating approximately from the Second century of our era.

Rumors of buried treasure are being substantiated on a small scale as the foundations of the huge hall, sixty meters in length, are investigated. There are remains of glassware from the Roman empire, ceramics with classical ornamentation, and numerous silver coins identified by their images of Trajanus, Hadrianus, Marcus Aurelius, Crispina, or other Roman rulers or consorts. Arabian coins bear a later date and suggest that the enormous house may have been desolate and deserted during a part of the age of migrations, 400-700, to be utilized again by the Vikings and their associates. These finds therefore seem to substantiate certain hypotheses about other interesting sections of the island.

The Swedish island of Oland, with its sixteen known sites of ancient fortifications, has recently been surveyed for archeological purposes from the air by Dr. Marten Stenberger on this his seventh year of intensive study of the region, somewhat barren but also picturesque with its steppeslike vegetation. Here again there are traces of devastation and some forceful evacuation of populations in the same period—the centuries before and after 500 A. D.

Views Taken From Air.

The largest fortification, Graborgen, was probably constructed at this time. Another, Ismanstorp, enclosed no less than eighty-eight houses. An interesting fact disclosed by the recent aerial survey was that the houses were built around a rectangle or square, a type of building heretofore identified with the Middle Ages.

This work is supplemented with equally important work on the continent to the south and southeast. Prof. Birger Nerman, Swedish archeologist, has concentrated on Grobin in Latvia. He has identified Grobin as the Seeburg of legend, where King Olaf came in the middle of the Ninth century, plundering first Seeburg and later Apulia, now identified with the section called Apuole.

Hedeby, an old Viking center near Schleswig, is about to be made the subject of special study and will therewith become the first Viking town to be excavated on a comprehensive scale.

The connections between Hedeby and Birka, a Viking town once flourishing on the island of Bjorko—the picturesque and idyllic Swedish "island of birches"—are being stressed and various theories are offered as to the relation between the two. Either Hedeby was a transit port, established for the trade of Birka, or, according to one speculation, Birka was a far northern outpost of Danish trade.

Holds Pygmy Court; Inspired by Golf!

Holy Cats! 5 Bucks for Mending "Holy Chicken"

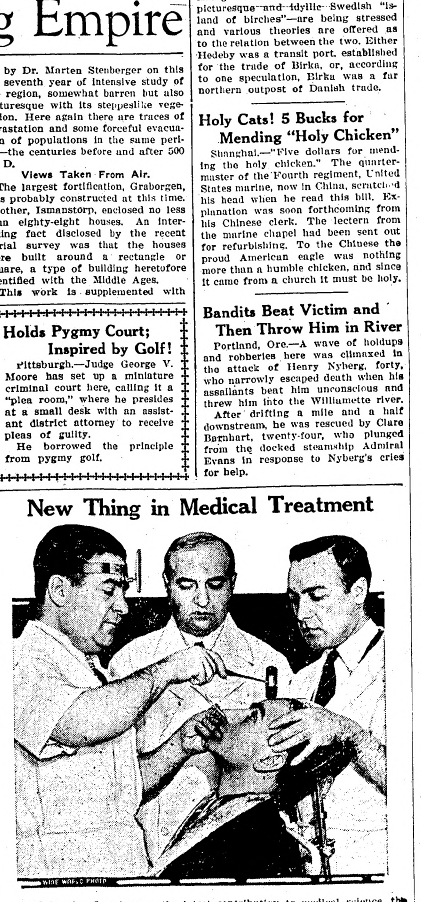
Shanghai.—"Five dollars for mending the holy chicken." The quartermaster of the Fourth regiment, United States marine, now in China, scratched his head when he read this bill. Explanation was soon forthcoming from his Chinese clerk. The lectern from the marine chapel had been sent out for refurbishing. To the Chinese the proud American eagle was nothing more than a humble chicken, and since it came from a church it must be holy.

Bandits Beat Victim and Then Throw Him in River

Portland, Ore.—A wave of holdups and robberies here was climaxed in the attack of Henry Nyberg, forty, who narrowly escaped death when his assailants beat him unconscious and threw him into the Willamette river.

After drifting a mile and a half downstream, he was rescued by Clare Barnhart, twenty-four, who plunged from the docked steamship Admiral Evans in response to Nyberg's cries for help.

New Thing in Medical Treatment



Endonasal reflex therapy, the latest contribution to medical science, the discovery of two eminent South American doctors, is now being demonstrated in New York city by Dr. Salvatore Caridi and Dr. Emanuel A. Manginelli. The treatment is administered by the stimulating of the nerve centers through the channels of the nose without the use of any medicines.

BLEACHING FLIVVERS NOW DOT SOUTHWEST DESERTS

Take Place of Long-Horn Skulls; Smart Resorts Built in Arid Wastes.

New York.—The bleaching bones of steers and horses, once the symbols of suffering and lost hopes in the wide deserts of the Southwest, have been replaced by battered and abandoned flivvers.

Old trails among hummocks of ashen earth, where once the traveler encountered the white skulls of longhorns, now run between twisted fenders and flat tires. That is the report brought back by Richmond Barrett, who has just inspected the smart resort colonies of the desert country for Harper's Bazaar.

The feature of the Arizona countryside that impressed him most was the sahuaro, or giant cactus, a plant doomed to extinction. One specimen was 40 feet high, had 28 thick branches, and has been standing more than a thousand years.

"There are no baby sahuaro," Mr. Barrett explains, "The specimens in existence today are barren survivals whose seed long ago became sterile."

Three of the smart colonies in the desert country are near Phoenix, Ariz.; at Chandler, in the same state, and at Palm Springs, Calif. One of the details that makes them popular, Mr. Barrett reports, is the air. It's not ordinary breathing air. "My whole body seemed to swim in it, as in a vast pool of double-distilled water," he says. "The idea of ever experiencing fatigue or becoming jaded in Arizona or Palm Springs strikes a lowland visitor as preposterous."

"The Arizona desert around the Apache trail," he writes, "is a vast tumbled waste of rock, through which a single road twists and coils and climbs, a mere thread thrown out by human pertinacity across primeval chaos. Most mountains, with their snowy heads, have an appearance of life, of hale and vigorous old age. The mountains of Arizona are dead; but their unburied bones have been steeped in more gorgeous and barbaric dyes than ever the grave-wrappings of an Egyptian Pharoah could boast. By some mysterious process, the sun and the storms have baked and tinted and tooled the whole region into the semblance of a heap of colossal pottery.

"The prevailing tone of the rocks is an autumnal purplish red, like that rich stain left by the trodden grapes in an old vat. The coloring is curiously dry now, almost as if it were flaking off. There is nothing oily or fat about the texture of it. It is the patina of the desert, I suppose."

And, amid all that splendor, abandoned flivvers.

Plan for Memorial on Famous Dueling Ground

On the top of the Palisades at Weehawken, below which at the waterside was the dueling ground upon which Aaron Burr killed Alexander Hamilton, a monument to the memory of Hamilton is to arise if the plans of the Alexander Hamilton Memorial association, newly organized in New York, do not fail. The site is almost directly across the Hudson from Thirtieth street.

Many besides Hamilton fell on this most famous dueling ground, one of them his eldest son. But no death there was more notable than his in 1804.

Castoria made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

Collects Skulls for Living

The claim that he is the only man in the world in his particular line of business is made by Herr Hugo Brech. He supplies English doctors with Russian skulls. "There is a steady demand for Russian skulls in good condition," Herr Brech said. "Because of the hard fare on which Russian peasants live their teeth are in very good condition, and the skulls are therefore invaluable for dental demonstrations. My firm collects the skulls in Russia, and it is my job to sell them to doctors. A good skull brings in about $90."

How to Escape FLU

1 Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.

2 Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.

3 Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.

4 Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle; this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.

5 If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

THE COMMUNITY AND ITS BANKS

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

R. C. STEPHENSON

While upon the individual bankers there rests without qualification the direct responsibility for the prudent, honest conduct of their institutions, nevertheless the soundness of banking as a practical matter of fact is a community problem in which the public has a part to play as well as bankers and government officials charged with the supervision of banks.

In the first place, the assets of a bank, outside its government bonds, consist mainly of loans to business men and of investments in securities created by corporate enterprises. The deposits of a bank are not kept in the vaults as idle cash but are employed in these loans and investments to earn the money to pay the expenses of the bank so that it can render services to its customers and also pay them interest on such deposits as bear interest. If there were no such thing as unsound business men or enterprises there would be no such thing as unsound assets in a bank.

It is of course the unquestioned duty of the banker to choose only sound loans and investments, but the difficulty of such judgment, and human judgment is never infallible, is plainly increased in such times and under such conditions as we have been passing through, with many businesses not making expected earnings and therefore hampered in meeting their obligations. Unfortunately some investments and loans created by persons outside the banks which found their way into the banks in a relatively few instances have reflected the unwise business policies and conditions that became more than usually prevalent in our business activities and contributed to the difficulty of banking. The vast bulk of bank assets, however, are 100 per cent sound above all question.

"Hard Boiled" vs. "Easy" Banker

In another aspect the people of the community have a part to play in maintaining the soundness of their banks, and that is through the medium of patronage. The existence of a bank is dependent on public patronage. If only those banks were patronized in which the most careful policies were practiced and the most conscientious and able men in charge, it would go far toward maintaining the standards of banking. If business men in a community when refused loans by their banks for good and sufficient reasons because conditions are not favorable, thereupon withdraw their business to banks where less careful methods prevail, they clearly contribute to the creation of a less sound banking situation.

Also if, in the heat of competition, a banker offers higher interest rates or more free service to attract customers than the earnings of conservative banking justify, and is encouraged by the patronage of the public as against a more conservative bank, obviously the public is again playing a part in bringing about a less sound banking situation. It is an unfortunate fact that the banker who is strict, "hard boiled" if you please, is liable to be less popular than the "easy" banker, and by that same token the public itself has a voice in influencing the character of banking. Also it is the public in the end which pays the main part of the penalty if unfortunate results follow.

Still again the public can exert an influence in shaping the character of banking by supporting the purposes of bankers to maintain intelligent, independent, honest banking supervision by the public banking departments through insisting that this function of government shall be kept as free from political influence as the judiciary itself and shall be manned only by men of the highest ability and character.

In still another way can the people themselves contribute to maintaining the ability of their banks to meet their obligations, and this is by granting them the fullest possible confidence. As I said, the deposits are not kept as cash but are invested in loans and securities. Even the soundest assets of this type require some time to reconvert at full value into cash deposits. In many cases of bank troubles the only thing wrong with a bank was an unduly suspicious and apprehensive state of mind in its customers created by no act or condition of its own but by baseless rumors which sometimes led them to destroy the value of their own deposits by demanding them immediately, forcing a bank to sacrifice its assets and otherwise disrupt its financial operations.

Bankers Help

During the year 1930 the Bankers' Association of Langlade County, Wisconsin, worked out the finances for a cooperative milk plant, which entailed the raising of $100,000, and also sponsored an active 4-H-Club campaign that culminated in an "Achievement Day" program, in which upwards of 400 young people participated. The increase in the number interested in this work was 250 per cent over the past two year period.

Delinquent Tax List
For Marshall County, Minnesota, for the Year 1929

State of Minnesota,
County of Marshall—ss.

District Court,
14th Judicial District.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, to all Persons, Companies and Corporations, who have or claim any estate, right, title or interest, in claim to, or lien upon, any of the several pieces or parcels of land in the list hereto attached described:

The list of taxes and penalties on real property for the County of Marshall remaining delinquent on the first Monday in January, 1931, has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of said County, of which that hereto attached is a copy.

THEREFORE, You, and each of you, are hereby required to file in the office of said Clerk, on or before the twentieth day after the publication of this notice and list, your answer in writing, setting forth any objection or defense you may have to the taxes, or any part thereof, upon any parcel of land described in said list, in, to, or on which you have or claim any estate, right, title, interest, claim or lien, and in default thereof, judgment will be entered against such parcel for the taxes on said list appearing against it, and for all penalties, interest and cost.

You are further notified that at the expiration of five years from the date of tax judgment sale pursuant to such judgment, each parcel of land sold at such sale, and not redeemed, will become and be the absolute property of the purchaser or of the State, or of his or its assigns, without further right of redemption and without any notice of expiration of the time to redeem the same.

Dated February 2nd, 1931.

A. C. SWANDBY,
Clerk of the District Court of Marshall County, Minnesota.

Device Warns Engineer of Locomotive's Slip

To prevent accidents caused by the back-slipping of locomotives in foggy weather or in smoke-filled tunnels, a young fireman of Glasgow, Scotland, Alexander McQueen, has patented an ingenious device. The danger arises from the fact that the slipping is unknown to the engineer, and Glasgow has had recent terrible experience of the havoc that can be wrought in such cases. The invention consists of a revolving cam which acts on the vacuum valve in the guard's van. It is operated from the axle by a flexible shaft, and can be adjusted at will either for forward or backward motion, or put entirely out of gear for shunting operations. Normally, it will be set for forward motion, the slightest backward motion of the train setting the cam in motion, which automatically raises the test valve, thereby admitting air to the vacuum chamber and applying the brakes.

How to Display Flag

If the flag is used on the speaker's platform, it should be displayed above and behind the speaker, the union being to the audience's left as they face it. If the flag is flown from a staff, it should be on the speaker's right. If displayed on staff to one side of stage, as in a church, it should be from a staff placed on the right of audience as they face the stage; any other flag should be at the left.

Good Job, but Late

Recently when a Junction City woman cleaned her attic and found seven perfectly good hats which her daughters were no longer wearing she decided to send them to a rummage sale. She hailed a small boy, gave him a dime and directed him to take the package to the place of sale.

Later one of the daughters was mystified when she received a bill from a local cleaning establishment for cleaning seven hats. Imagine her amazement when the package was unwrapped to see long-forgotten millinery dating back to the days before the war. They had cleaned beautifully!—Junction City (Kan.) Union.

McMurray Bros. To Have Sale

McMurray Brothers who have been doing fine work the past few years in raising purebred Holstein cattle, have now got so large a herd that they have decided to sell twenty head of these purebred registered Holsteins.

The sale will be held on their place six miles east of Holt on the graveled highway on Saturday, March 14th, at 1 o'clock.

Since they started farming here they have kept the best cows that it was possible for them to raise and have during the past sold many head to stockmen and dairy farmers in this part of the state and No. Dak.

Animals from this herd exhibited at the county fairs and state fair have won many ribbons and prizes.

Raised Gas Tax in N. D.

The North Dakota Legislature last week passed a bill increasing the gasoline tax from 3 to 4 cents. The bill will take effect July 1. The tax will be divided 2½ cents to the state highway fund and 1½ cents to the counties.

The Wisconsin state senate, by a vote 22 to 10, has passed a bill increasing the tax in that state from 2 to 4 cents. The same bill also repeals the personal property tax on automobiles, but increases the license fee or so called "weight tax" which already averages the same as the Minnesota registration tax.

If the Wisconsin house approves the bill, Minnesota will have four cent gas tax states on both the east and the west, as South Dakota already has a 4 cent tax. The Iowa gas tax is 3 cents.

Letter From Selvig

The Republican caucus to organize for control of the next House was held February 28, and your congressman stayed away from it. He did so in order to preserve his independence of action on changes in the rules. Speaker Longworth has always been fair, and is a very high type of man, but the Rules Committee has taken to itself too much power, amounting almost to domination, and has been inclined to be indifferent if not unfriendly to the dairy industrs and to agriculture generally. I hope to see some changes in the rules and in the personnel of the Rules Committee.

A. W. Peterson and family of Middl [illegible] visited at the Einar Loven home Friday evening.

Eliminated Again

The elections in the past few years have been very interesting in as much as they have changed about the political power from one party to another. Only last fall our state got a change which some, to this day do not like, while others claim that a clean shirt once in a while does not hurt anyone.

But as we were mentioning elections we come right back close to home. On Tuesday of this week every township held their annual election. They even had a big one down in Excell. But in order to discard this old life-time job holding system they have had for years, they also decided to dress up their politics a little by discarding the old political powers that have hung so long a give some one else a chance. Good work boys.

Will Treat No. 32

Bids on bituminous treatment of 630 miles of graveled trunk highways, will be received by the Minnesota Highway department March 17, Commissioner C. M. Babcock announces. Another 150 miles, more or less, may be added to the program later in the season, it is announced. Minnesota now has 1,150 miles of bituminous gravel in the trunk higway system and the 1931 program will bring the total close to 1,900.

Included in the stretches on which bids for tarring or oiling will be taken this month are two stretches of good highways close to us and, they are, Trunk Highway No. 32 from Holt to Greenbush and Trunk Highway No. 6 from Warren to Junction of No. 8 at Crookston, a distance of 28.5 miles.

The tentative schedule on which bids will be received on March 17 calls for figures on 12,700,000 gallons of material.

Play To Be Given Here

The American Legion and Auxiliary of Middle River will come here next Thursday evening, March 19th, to present a real comedy play in five acts.

The have put on this play in their home town and had a very fine turn out for it. Now, when they come here, let us turn out and show them that we appreciate their coming to our town to present a good play and give us an evening of entertainment.

The play, "Sonny Jane", is full of laughs and tricks at every turn. Read their ad on the back page of this issue and come in Thursday night.

"Olle i Skratthult" Not Dead

Some time ago rumor had it that Hjalmar Peterson "Olle i Skratthult" was dead. This is not so. He may be dead to the show world, however, as he has gone into the grocery business at Duluth.

There has never been a brake invented yet that will stop a car as quickly as a telephone pole.

"Know What Your Cows Are Doing"

When you begin to make a careful study of what your cows are doing; according to the production of each individual cow, and what each one eats, you are on the right road to successful dairying.

Give each cow a name or number, keep a record of what she eats, and how much she gives. If you don't care to join a testing association or are out of the territory of one, bring your milk in to your buttermaker to have it tested. He will be glad to do it for you and give you advice about feeding your cows.

Study your cows and watch your profits grow.

INDIGESTION GOES—QUICKLY, PLEASANTLY

When you suffer from heartburn, gas or indigestion, it's usually too much acid in your stomach. The quickest way to stop your trouble is with Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. A spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids—instantly. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

Try Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, and you will never allow yourself to suffer from over-acidity again. It is the standard anti-acid with doctors.

Your drugstore has Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, with directions for use, in generous 25c and 50c bottles.

Differences in Halos

In art the nimbus, or halo of light encircling the head of Christ, is usually of gold, enriched with a cross—a triangular nimbus for the Father, a square one for a person still living, and disk or fillet-shaped for a saint or martyr.

Run-Down, Weak, Nervous?

To have plenty of firm flesh and the ability to do a big day's work and feel "like a two-year-old" at night, you must relish your food and properly digest it. If you can't eat, can't sleep, can't work, just give Tanlac the chance to do for you what it has done for millions.

Mrs. Fred Westin, of 387 E. 57th St. North, Portland, Ore., says: "Tanlac cured my stomach trouble completely after three years suffering. It built me up to perfect health, with a gain of 27 lbs."

Tanlac is wonderful for indigestion—gas pains, nausea, dizziness and headaches. It brings back lost appetite, helps you digest food, and gain strength and weight. No mineral drugs; only roots, barks and herbs, nature's own medicines. Less than 2 cents a dose. Get a bottle from your druggist. Your money back if it doesn't help.

Young Fascists to Drill Every Sunday

Two Million Italian Boys and Girls Enrolled in Youth Movement.

Rome.—Thousands of squads, platoons and companies of boys in Fascist uniform march in disciplined military formations every Sunday in Italy.

Athletic youths in olive-green breeches, black shirts and fezlike caps with swinging tassels go through military drill to the commands of Fascist militia officers in hundreds of towns. Some drill with rifles, others without. From rifle ranges is heard the crack of target practice.

This is an outward manifestation of one of the most notable and significant institutions of the Fascist regime—the Opera Nazionale Balilla—comprising some 2,083,240 boys and girls between eight and eighteen years. Upon this voluntary organization the Fascist state is placing its greatest reliance for the perpetuation of the regime and the moral, physical and military education of rising generations. Fascism is centering its hopes for the future in youth, physical fitness and guns.

Military Only One Phase.

The military phase is only one, and not the most important, aspect of this remarkable Fascist institution, although emphasis is laid upon semi-military training in the later stages between fourteen and eighteen.

Between the ages of eight and fourteen most emphasis is laid upon moral and physical education. This stage resembles the Boy and Girl Scout movement, although more nationalistic. Sometimes little boys march with toy rifles. Some of the older girls are taught the use of the rifle and markmanship.

Children are inculcated with the concepts of Fascism from the beginning, in accordance with the primary purposes of the movement. The Balilla's manual says: "It must nourish their minds and form them to Fascist standards, impregnating them with all that is high, noble and pure in the doctrine of new Italy," and complete the state program by "constant intellectual propaganda."

The institution is organized on the basis of the armies of ancient Rome and is composed of a squadron of 11 children. Three squadrons form a platoon; three platoons form a company, and so on to the legion, which comprises nine companies.

497 Legions on Parade.

On the last anniversary of the Fascist "march of Rome" it was announced there were 497 legions of boys between eight and fourteen and 238 legions between fourteen and eighteen years. The movement is divided into four great divisions—two for boys and two for girls—which are, respectively: Balilla, Avanguardisti, Piccole Italiani and Giovane Italia.

The latest membership figures given by Giovanni Giuriati, secretary of the Fascist party, are as follows: Balilla, 954,903; Avanguardisti, 395,708; Piccole Italiani, 640,000, and Giovane Italia, 92,630, making a total of 1,350,611 boys and 732,630 girls in the organization.

The most extensive activities of the Balilla organization are devoted to cultural, industrial and physical training. Many hundreds of modern recreation centers and playgrounds have been established, schools of arts and crafts, evening classes for technical instruction, industrial training, courses in agricultural instruction, training in seamanship in the coast towns, seaside and mountain colonies for weak children, classes in sanitation, training in wireless telegraphy, anti-aircraft gunnery and preliminary training in aviation for older boys. Girls are given somewhat similar training concentrating upon the requirements of their roles as the future wives and mothers of Italy.

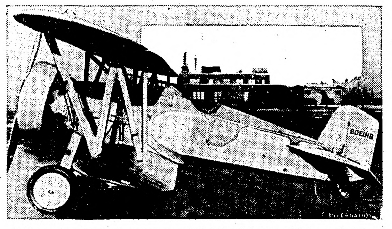
First of New Navy Fighting Planes



Fifteen fast Boeing wasp-powered fighting planes, which reached a speed of 350 miles per hour in a 10,000-foot vertical power dive and which will be used as deck fighters and diving bombers by the naval air service, were delivered in Seattle, Wash., to the airplane carrier Lexington by the Boeing Airplane company on its contract for 46 airplanes of this type. They are said to out-speed the navy fighters of any other nation. Special flotation bags keep the plane afloat if forced down at sea. These fighters carry machine guns and bombs.

SIMPLE TRICK HID THEFTS BY SEATTLE BANK CASHIER

Deposit Cards Removed, Says Embezzler When Brought Up for Sentence.

Seattle.—By the simple expedient of removing savings deposit cards Horace Greeley Phillips, former assistant cashier of the Asburn National bank, evaded for five years detection of serious shortages in his accounts.

His method of covering up defalcations amounting to $6,000 was revealed in Federal court when Phillips appeared for sentence on a charge of embezzlement to which he pleaded guilty recently.

Such a strong plea was made for leniency, however, that Judge J. Neterer directed Federal Probation Officer Adrian B. Miller to investigate the circumstances. Sentence was put over.

So successful was Phillips' system, Assistant United States Attorney Jeffrey Heiman said, that examiners did not discover the shortage until a savings depositor whose card had been removed made demand for his money. The cards were found in Phillips' home.

Through his attorney, Paul D. Coles, Phillips admitted his peculations began when he was a teller.

"Money had been missing at various times in the bank and several employees under suspicion were discharged," Coles said. "One day Phillips discovered that he was $100 short. Some one else had taken the money, but he was afraid to report it for fear he would be blamed. So he removed a savings deposit card to make his accounts balance."

A few months later, Coles stated, Phillips took $120 himself and covered it up in the same manner. From then on he used the system for his own benefit. After he was found out Phillips, the court was told, made partial restitution, turning his home and other property over to the bank.

"This man cannot suffer more for his misdeeds than he has already," Coles declared in asking for a suspended sentence.

Locomotive Seized in Payment of Fines

Walnut Ridge, Ark.—A Frisco locomotive was recently attached here by Sheriff R. B. Warner to obtain payment of fines assessed against the line in Circuit court.

The decision of the court for fines aggregating $5,000 was affirmed by the United States Supreme court, and when the company refused payment the sheriff seized a fast locomotive.

Paris Seeks to Avoid Ravages From Seine

Paris.—The Paris council general of the Seine will shortly ask for 10,000,000 francs to supplement existing appropriations for the protection of Paris and its suburbs from the frequent rising of the Seine.

Judging future floods by past performances, M. Lenarchand indicated that Paris has a real flood every 11 years and an important rise in the river about every three years.

The city council has drawn up a plan which when completed will make the valleys of the Seine and Marne near Paris safe from sudden floods.

Reservoirs will be built letting in the overflowing water; new buildings along the quai which have cellars below the Seine will be rigorously inspected and constructions in zones which are not considered safe will be forbidden.

It is suggested that the Pont de L'Alma be rebuilt, especially the substructure from which floods always escape in bad weather. Near Notre Dame dredgers will begin making the Seine deeper and the current faster, although at other places in the suburbs the river will be widened.

Hen Takes Over Job of Raising Small Puppies

Russellville, Ark.—Fronie, the police dog, and Henny Penny, the hen, are on the "outs" with each other.

One day Fronie left her seven newly-born pups to search for something to eat and returned to find the hen sitting on as many pups as her wings would cover. Fronie objected but received only a sharp peck for her pains.

Now Henry Penny sits all day trying vainly to "protect" all seven of the puppies at once with quick pecks at anyone who dares touch her foster children.

Every now and then Fronie, by force, chases the Rhode Island hen out of the dog box and gives her offspring a light lunch.

Grant, the trader, followed the trails of Marquette and La Salle into this country, where he arrived about 1800.

Small Force Comprises British Army in India

There are 60,000 British troops in India, and 150,000 Indian troops, with 34,000 reservists. This force constitutes the sole military weapon on the spot with which to defend an area of 1,805,000 square miles and a population of approximately 319,000,000, to protect a vast continent against external aggression and internal disturbance.

There is one British soldier to each 30 square miles of territory, and to each group of 5,315 Indians.

It may assist in giving a more concrete idea of the position if it is pointed out that the figures quoted above represent—assuming an even distribution—one unit of 1,000 British troops for each 30,000 square miles of territory, and one unit of 1,000 Indian troops for each 12,000 square miles.

In many cases, the district officer is hundreds of miles from the nearest troops; he may easily spend his whole service in India without seeing a British soldier, except when he visits a garrison town, probably well over 100 miles away, for official or social purposes.

We have often been told that "India is held by the sword"; the statistics given above lend no support to that dictum, and it is hotly denied by all who know the real facts of the situation.—Sir John Campbell in the Atlantic Monthly.

Avoid Burns from Mustard Plasters

When you have Rheumatic or Muscular Pains in the back, chest or limbs or if you have a cold coming on, try this simple treatment. It is more convenient, safer, cleaner and more effective than mustard plaster.

Get a bottle of Hoff's Liniment and apply it with brisk rubbing. Then saturate a cloth with Hoff's and apply to the painful area and in a few minutes you will feel the warming and stimulating effect of this powerful liniment.

Hoff's is different from ordinary liniments that are applied with rubbing alone. It brings a quick flow of blood to the affected area, reducing congestion and relieving pain. Get an eight ounce bottle of your druggist today for 60 cents. If you do not get relief in 30 minutes he is authorized to refund your money. Goodrich-Gamble Company, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Clock Silent Reminder of Neglected Deposit

An ingenious incentive to thrift—a quality for which the French people are justly famous—is provided by a device recently placed on the market. It is a clock, which is at the same time a savings bank. Unless one feeds it a franc, or two francs, or three francs, as the case may be, each day, it will not run. The owner of the clock if he does not wish the openly accusing face of the timepiece to stare at him heartlessly, motionless, and silently, must therefore make his savings deposit regularly as he would wind his alarm clock. In an age when time payments can be made on almost anything, the savings clock will probably assist many people in paying their installments promptly.

Lucky Find

When we find some slight help makes a marvelous improvement in a child, we wonder why we hadn't thought of doing it long ago.

Here's a good example: "My little girl was doing fairly well," says Mrs. M. Seltenbach, 5605 Emile Street, Omaha, Neb., "but I noticed she didn't eat right and didn't have much energy.

"Our doctor had recommended California Fig Syrup, so I gave her some. She improved so much I wonder I didn't do something for her stomach and bowels before. She has a good appetite and digestion and plenty of energy, now."

To point up a child's appetite, increase energy and strength, assist digestion and regulate the bowels there's nothing like California Fig Syrup. Doctors advise it to open bowels in colds or children's diseases; or whenever bad breath, coated tongue, etc., warn of constipation.

CHAPTER XI

—19—

A Japanese View of Isabella

Mrs. Krassin still stood where the soldier had placed her when Musia emerged from Loris' car. Still stood, looking like a very pale, plain, expressionless statue.

Expressionless—but she had thus stood apprehensive, eager, expectant, unmoving all this long time.

She felt humiliated that her address had failed—but despairingly hopeful that Musia's appeal had not. After all, why should she care what Loris thought of Musia's mother?

When Musia came down the steps of the car to the platform, Mrs. Krassin looked at her much as the fisherman inspects the worm or the minnow on his hook as he draws it from the water after a cast for a fish. Had it been convincing enough? Had the great fish struck at it?

Musia was dreadfully unattractive! This feeling darkened her mind as the girl came down the platform, red-eyed with weeping, pale-cheeked with agitation, the cold fury of offended pride in her eyes.

As if her mother had been a stranger, Musia's glance passed her by as she walked with a swaying staggering movement up the platform the way they had come.

The guard paid no more attention to Mrs. Krassin, who ran after and overtook her daughter, who never once looked at her. In fact, they did not once venture upon a meeting of eyes, far less a meeting of minds in conversation. But Mrs. Krassin's face caught and held the eye of many a passer-by, as she made her way along the street in what seemed to her quite her ordinary and normal manner, lifting her skirt to clear the filth of the street, with the little pallid, red-eyed girl following her. But what was in her expression, thought many who saw her? Was it remorse? Was it triumph? Was it madness? Whatever it was, it devoured her mind and soul.

"Look out!"

Thus shouted an old man with an ivory-colored fleece hanging from under his cap and a great white beard all over his breast; and Mrs. Krassin awakening to a consciousness of things about her, found thrust into her face the drooling muzzle of a great shaggy black horse. Musia instinctively seized her mother's shoulder and was pulling her back upon the sidewalk.

"Oh, I see it!" exclaimed Mrs. Krassin irritably.

Musia shrugged her shoulders, as if to say, "As you please!" The only other word uttered by either of them spoken by Mrs. Krassin as they turned into their own gateway.

"This comes of being robbed of our motor car," said she.

Musia, without replying, stepped back to allow her mother to precede her; and when Mrs. Krassin turned as if to speak to her after they had gone in, the girl looked away and went to her own apartment.

Mrs. Krassin locked herself in her own room and did not appear for two or three days. She felt the aversion in her daughter's manner, and was all the time trying to divine exactly what it meant. She could think of several elements in the girl's thoughts which might make her averse to intercourse with her mother; and at the beginning of this phase of their relations she came to the conclusion that this mystery of Musia's state of mind, which she felt that she must fathom, was only to be solved by observation of her daughter's behavior, of her ways of spending her time, of her incomings and outgoings, especially the latter. She made such arrangements that she knew where Musia was at all times. She watched the girl when she went out of the house to walk about the grounds; she grew agitated when Musia approached the gates; she seemed to despair when she turned back from them toward the house; and when she came in and went about her indoor employments, Mrs. Krassin beat her breast with mingled grief and anger.

Some certain things she felt that she knew: that Ilya's life hung on Loris' decision; that Loris would spare that life if Musia interceded as effectively as she could; and that in the absence of such intercession, their visit to Loris had made the boy's case hopeless—that they had robbed him of any chance of liberation which he had theretofore possessed.

"Unless the price is paid," she said, over and over to herself, "we have murdered him! There is nothing else to do! There is no other way out! Why does she hesitate? Oh, if I could only talk to her!"

She had heard of people being shot at sunrise; and for an hour every morning, she prayed that Ilya might be spared: prayed to God that the dreadful ransom might be paid before it was too late. Never before in her life had she been so religious.

She spent hours trying to visualize what had taken place between Musia and Loris in Loris' reception room, after she herself had been turned out of it. She recalled every phase of Musia's appearance and behavior, her eyes reddened with weeping, her refusal to look at her mother, her aloofness now. Were these things manifestations of maidenly shame? Were they signs of indignation and anger?

Why had not Musia looked prettier? She could be very charming, Mrs. Krassin bitterly thought, when nothing depended upon it; but now— Ilya! Ilya!

Sometimes she would find herself crying the name of her son aloud. Perhaps they were killing him, now! At such times she would start up to go to Musia to plead with her; to command her, to question her; but always she would return to her seat, knowing that to do this was impossible. She was quelled by a sense of the fact that no mother had ever said such things to a daughter—that according to the standards of the old life, she would be pleading or commanding the impossible, the inadmissible. This held her back; but the forms and conventions of a lifetime were equally powerful. Whatever happened, she could not speak to Musia about these matters. Not now, not afterward if the girl did what was demanded by the new standard of duty which her mother had set up for her, even if they should live together to the end of their lives. She simply had no language with which to communicate to the girl her thoughts and desires.

But she heard of the subconscious influence of mind over mind—that one will by concentration upon another could bend the servient will to its purposes. She had read of hypnotists who had controlled the will of subjects, so that the latter had been influenced even to the commission of crimes. She thought that there was a book on this in the library; but she shrank from going down to refer to it. She recalled, however, a lecture she had once heard on hypnotism, and the methods described; so she lay awake at night trying to concentrate her will on Musia's will, commanding her over and over; and when she found her own thoughts were straying from this strange thing, she prayed for strength to prevail.

Sometimes She Would Find Hersel Crying the Name of Her Son Aloud.

What more could she do to sway the girl's mind, if she were so false and rebellious as to betray her brother and her mother? She recalled Musia's fondness for Shakespeare, and dimly remembered that in one of the plays there was some such demand on a girl as this which with all her soul she was making upon Musia. She studied carefully a collection of the plays which she had Sasha bring her, found and read "Measure for Measure," and was chagrined to tears when she read the great speeches of Isabella, rejecting the demands of Angelo. She underscored Angelo's speech:

> Then must your brother die!

and drew black lines erasing Isabella's answer:

> And 'twere the cheaper way:
> Better it were a brother died at once,
> Than that a sister, by redeeming him
> Should die forever.

And after this she wrote, "False and sinful!"

In the book she found a clipping from some newspaper, pasted on a page of "Measure for Measure," in which a writer had drawn a distinction between Japanese standards of morals in some things, and those of western nations.

How Venice Procured Body of Patron Saint

For many years Venice was the center of the most enlightened government and one of the most powerful states in Italy. Although her geography and her buildings have a unique fascination, her history is the most romantic and picturesque aspect of all.

The story of St. Mark, her patron saint, is a daring and exciting one. In the year 827 A. D a Venetian ship lying in the harbor of Alexandria was commanded by three men, Rustico of Torcello, Buono of Malamocco and one Stauracio, who were animated by the felonious but pious purpose of depriving the city of its most valuable possession—the body of St. Mark.

After much argument and bribery they induced the guardian of the tomb to become a party to their design. Thus St. Mark was brought with great ceremony to Venice, there to be given a magnificent reception and to become her patron saint.

Realism Untrue

Realism as a literary method is fundamentally untrue to life. — James Branch Cabell.

MAN CALLS HIS CHILDREN IN TO SEE WIFE SLAIN

Orders Her to Pray for Sins, Then Shoots; Gives Up to Police.

New York.—In the presence of their five children, whom he had called to witness his act and after he had accused his wife before them of infidelity and ordered her to her knees to pray, Orlesta Georgia, forty-six, shot his wife, Carmella, to death in their home at 117 Kane street, Brooklyn.

Then, in the midst of the confusion that followed and while detectives called by neighbors were on their way to the house, Georgia walked into the Butler street station, tossed a .38-caliber revolver and a bank book on the desk before the lieutenant and announced:

"I just killed my wife."

Jealousy the Cause.

Jealousy, and the fact that the wife had drawn $300 of their joint savings to give to another man, were given by Georgia as his motives for the shooting, during a long examination following his surrender. Following the questioning, Assistant Attorney Ralph K. Jacobs made public a statement made to him, he said, by Georgia.

In this statement Georgia said that on December 19 he had seen his wife being hugged and kissed by a man he knew as Pepino. He did not take her to task for this, he said, but made an investigation and found that neighbors had contributed to a purse to send Pepino to Italy.

Shot His Wife to Death.

Georgia said that he then asked his wife to show him the bank book of their joint account and discovered that $300 had been drawn from the trust which he had established for their eldest son, Joseph, when he should have come of age.

Calls Her Liar.

He asked her why this sum had been withdrawn and she told him that she had drawn the money to buy grapes for the household wine.

"You are lying to me," Georgia said he told her. "I paid for the grapes myself and you did not need any $300 for household expenses."

Georgia told the police that he then called in his five children—Joseph, twenty; Santa, fourteen; Thomas, eleven; Alfred, seven, and Tony, three—and denounced their mother to them.

"Get down on your knees and pray to God to save you," he said to her, and as the mother knelt before her children Georgia fired two shots. One bullet penetrated her right shoulder and the other pierced her heart. She died instantly. It was the twenty-first anniversary of the wedding of the Georgias.

Coast Town Has Had Two Murders in Forty Years

Port Townsend, Wash.—Killings are so rare in Port Townsend that a son of the lawyer who served as defense counsel in the last murder trial will be the defending lawyer in the first murder trial here in 40 years.

It was in the days of sailing vessels that the father came to Port Townsend to defend Dominico Corella, Italian fruit vendor who killed John Deletis, his Greek partner, on July 3, 1880.

Corella was finally convicted and sentenced to life, but was later paroled.

The son will defend Mrs. Lulu Gene Hilsinger here on a charge of first degree murder for the slaying of her husband, George F. Hilsinger, Fort Worden warrant officer.

Fisherman Rescue Sea Gull From Goosefish

Provincetown, Mass.—Antone and Domingo Joseph, Cape Cod fishermen, while fishing on the Ranges, 15 miles off here, were attracted by a sea gull's screams. They headed for the scene and came upon a big goosefish with a sea gull in its mouth. The fishermen attacked the goosefish with a pitchfork and the gull, released, flew away.

Man Fined $50 When He Refuses to Help Police

Turlock, Calif.—Reuben Olson probably will give any help requested by the next law officer who appeals to him. Olson was fined $50 for refusing to help Policeman John Rutledge arrest a burly ranch laborer inflamed with drink.

Soothes restless, wakeful CHILD

THERE are times when a baby is too fretful or feverish to be sung to sleep. There are some pains a mother cannot pat away. But there's no time when any baby can't have the quick comfort of Castoria! A few drops, and your little one is soon at ease—back to sleep almost before you can slip away.

Remember this harmless, pure vegetable preparation when children are ailing. Don't stop its use when Baby has been brought safely through the age of colic, diarrhea, and other infantile ills. Give good old Castoria until your children are in their teens! Whenever coated tongues tell of constipation; when there's any sign of sluggishness, just give them a more liberal dose. Castoria is so pleasant-tasting; all children love to take it.

Treasure Beyond Price Discovered in Pompeii

An exceptionally important archeological find is reported from Pompeii. It consists of a valuable silver table service and a rich collection of jewelry deposited in a wooden case. The table service includes cups, tumblers, carved silver vessels decorated with scenes representing the labors of Hercules, a number of spoons, a silver mirror, a scent bottle, and a jug. Among the jewelry are gold bracelets, earrings, gold rings, silver plates with decorations in relief in the center. In addition 66 coins have been found—30 of gold and 33 of silver—some republican, the rest imperial. The new treasure was found in a house where a statue of Apollo and a number of beautiful frescoes, including a portrait of a man that is believed by some people to be Virgil, were found some time ago.

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, March 20, 1931. Volume 20; Number 47.

Out of the Past

Tacoma, Washington,
March 5, 1931.

Dear B. G. Hagglund:

I am very thankful for your letter, and other information. As I understand it, the town of Holt and the City by the same name have seen a great progressive era, during the last few years, more improvements have been done, than what had been accomplished in the past thousands of years.

When I came here in 1887, there were no roads, just trails,—one good thing, there were no automobiles, either. When the oxen got stuck in a mudhole with a load, it was to unload and carry the stuff over.

Then it must be farmers when there were oxen, I hear you say. Yes, Ole Molden, in Southwest corner of the township, Siverin Siverson, O. Finnberg, and Stensrud, them four in a line. Then a few more scattered settlers, or shall we call them farmers.

The land was mostly covered with popple timber and willow bushes, a genuine rabbit-hunter's paradise. The newspaper was the Warren Sheaf, Warren, Minn. The nearest railroad town was St. Hilaire, about 20 miles away. We got a postoffice at O. Finberg at last, later it moved to Stensrud. That's all I know.

I claimed the southwest quarter of Section 21, had two hailstorms and lots of mosquitoes. That is where H. Fosholm lives.

Excuse my poor writing. Anybody 77 years might do that.

Respectfully,
A. N. Wikander,
Route 3, Box 183,
Tacoma, Washington.

Highway Job to Start Soon

Work on a number of trunk highway paving, grading and bridge jobs, on which bids were opened last week, will get under way very soon, according to Commissioner C. M. Babcock. While paving, due to weather conditions, usually does not start until close to May 1, much of the preliminary work will be done before that time, while work on many of the grading and bridge projects will start sooner.

The grading job on No. 32 from Holt to Thief River Falls, 11.9 miles, 213,000 cubic yards of excavation, was given to C. W. McNamara of Sioux Falls, S. D. at a cost of $42,539.

School Notes

High School

We have now begun the memorization of the W.C.T.U. work for the declamatory contest.

The Biology class has been divided into groups of three, each group having a different project. Booklets containing information about the various projects will be made.

The 4-H club will meet next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, March the 24th. A program will also be rendered.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Two of the girls from our room are taking part in the declamatory contest.

Our eighth grade is now studying participles, infinites and gerunds in Grammar.

The song contest in the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th grades came out a tie.

These two songs have been written by our pupils. They are sung to the tune of "Springtime in the Rockies":

First: SPRINGTIME
Springtime is here again
The birds are coming from the south,
It brings the gentle rain,
The flowers come peeping out.
Then all the brooklets awake,
They all flow sparkling clear,
And flow to the rivers and lakes,
We know springtime is here.

II.
In the cold March
Winds began to blow,
The sky is bleak and gray,
While softly falls the snow.
And we stay inside all day,
The cold winds sting and bite,
We see a strange world,
A world all new and white,
Like a large white sheet unfurl'd.

Second: SWEET SPRINGTIME
When the sun is shining brightly
And the birds are overhead,
And flowers peeping lightly
In colors blue and red.
Their music makes us feel gay
At morning, noon, and night.
It makes us feel so happy
When going to bed at night.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

In the issue of March 6, we made it appear that Gertrude Nygaard was first on the Honor Roll in the sixth grade, when it should have been Gertrude Nohre.

We have new curtains of spring design and think they are very pretty.

Olive Engebretson is taking charge of the Industrial Arts class when Miss Rognlie coaches the Declamatory Contest.

Some of the letters written home from Asia were so interesting that they will be read in the English classes.

Third and Fourth Grades

The 4th grade made their highest score in the self-testing drill this year. They made the score of eight in nineteen and twenty.

Both grades made bean bags in Industrial Arts' class.

First and Second Grades

Seeing spring is so near at hand, our two grades are drawing birds so we will recognize them when they come from the south.

Each of the first and second graders have contributed towards decorating their room by bringing little yellow chicks in colored rings which are placed above the blackboards. They will take them home after Easter.

Close Election in Excel

Last week we published an item about elections in the townships close to us. Since then we have found out that the Township of Excell had one of the closest elections it has witnessed since it was organized.

Following are the officers who were elected to serve on the board: Gust Hillyer, supervisr, for 3 years; Arno Steinhuer, Treasurer for 2 years; Gunsten Skomedal, Assessor for 2 years; P. B. Malberg, Justice of the Peace for 2 years; Harvey Copp, Constable for 2 years.

Mr. Steinhauer won out in his race by only one vote and, the other candidates also had to count their votes closely.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank all those who voted for me in the recent close election in Excell Township.

Arno Steinhauer.

N. S. A. News

The most successful year in the history of the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston will be brought to a close Thursday evening, March 26, when diplomas and certificates will be presented to 113 Senior and Advanced students. Seventy-five seniors, and thirty-eight members of the Advanced class are listed for graduation, compared to sixty senior and twenty-five advanced, or a total of 85, one year ago.

From the standpoint of scholarship as well as interest and cooperation on the part of the faculty and students alike, it has been a year that will long be remembered by all who are interested in the growth and development of the "School of Service".

The most extensive building program since Kiehle building and Robertson Hall were erected in 1910 was completed during the summer and fall. Improvements include a new two-story, fireproof Physical Education building, a new auditorium, and a beautiful new library that will take care of the growing institution for many years to come.

In the many inter-school contests that were held during the year, the Northwest School carried off the lion's share of the honors. The Aggie football team won the state championship; the Livestock Judging team won the silver trophy in competition with three states and Canada, while the debate teams won unanimous verdicts in each of the triangle contests. In crops judging, the Northwest School ranked third, while the basketball squad stood second among the four agricultural schools of the state.

Impressive Commencement Week activities will close the twenty-fifth year of service for the Northwest School of Agriculture.

"Know What Your Cows Are Doing"

When you begin to make a careful study of what your cows are doing; according to the production of each individual cow, and what each one eats, you are on the right road to successful dairying.

Give each cow a name or number, keep a record of what she eats, and how much she gives. If you don't care to join a testing association or are out of the territory of one, bring your milk in to your buttermaker to have it tested. He will be glad to do it for you and give you advice about feeding your cows.

Study your cows and watch your profits grow.

Was a Problem

"Mary Jane caused me many anxious moments," says Mrs. G. G. McDowell, 4035 Wentworth Ave., So., Minneapolis, Minn. "She was listless, weak, had no appetite.

"She suffered a lot from colds until I began giving her California Fig Syrup. It made her strong, able to avoid colds; gave her a good appetite and digestion. She is the picture of health, now."

For over 50 years, California Fig Syrup has been helping bilious, weak, headachy, constipated babies and children. Doctors by thousands recommend this pure vegetable product. Children love its flavor. It acts gently to open the bowels in colds or children's diseases. Bowels become regular with its use and remain that way.

How you feel in the morning tells the real story

THAT'S the time you should feel like whistling and singing. Your muscles should itch to tackle the day's work. Your mind should quickly solve the problem that baffled you the afternoon before. Don't let your health slip away so that a night's rest fails in its natural recuperative powers. When you awaken with a "dragged out" physical or mental feeling, heed those bad symptoms. That's the time you need a dependable tonic to help restore your old time energy. Try a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which is sold by druggists.

Bad Stomach Cause of Bad Skin

You can't expect to have a good clear skin if your stomach is weak and disordered.

Undigested food sends poisons through the body, pimples appear—skin grows sallow and loses color. But these troubles will end quickly and skin clear up if you will start today taking Tanlac.

Tanlac is made from herbs, barks and roots. A tablespoonful before each meal stimulates the digestion naturally so that you can digest what you eat. And when your stomach is in good shape again watch how quickly skin begins to clear up. At your druggist's. Money back if it doesn't help you.

"Most of Shakespeare's plays," the writer stated, "are quite understandable by the people of Japan. Such pieces as "King Lear," "Julius Caesar" and "Coriolanus," for instance, are rather more in the Japanese stage of development than in that of the European of this day. But "Measure for Measure" falls flat. To make a heroine of Isabella for refusing to ransom her brother by yielding to Angelo, is to the mind of Nippon, mere insanity. To the Japanese, Isabella would be entitled to praise for thus ransoming Claudio. It would, to his mind, be no sacrifice of virtue. No Japanese could imagine a good sister refusing this plea of Claudio.

> Sweet sister, let me live:
> What sin you do to save a brother's life,
> Nature dispenses with the deed so far
> That it becomes a virtue!

On this Mrs. Krassin wrote, "This is true. God wills it!" Then she gave the book with the slip in it to Sasha the maid, and commanded her to leave it on Musia's desk, open where the passages were marked, and with the slip displayed.

Afterward, she wished she had not done this. It seemed a breach of etiquette. And it might work opposite to her wish; so she resorted again to prayer. She prayed that she might be forgiven for her unwisdom. She told God that nothing had taken place between Musia and Loris except what every one might have seen; she promised that if he would grant that Loris might be swayed from violence by the purity and greatness of his love for Musia, she would give him praise for ever and ever. Meanwhile, she watched Musia as a cat watches a mouse, eagerly expectant of the girl's second visit to Loris' car, for which, as she thought of Ilya, she yearningly hoped.

Musia, on the other hand, sought companionship. She went again to her father, and found that he had now taken up the writing of his reminiscences of the Russo-Japanese war. She listened to his stories for hours; and it happened that he paid a high tribute to the lofty sense of honor of the Samurai class in Japan. When she returned to her room, she found "Measure for Measure," with its underscorings and markings, the clipping, and the comments in a disguised hand, which she had no difficulty in identifying. She threw the book from her in hot indignation. She despaired of her future, she doubted the worth of life itself, when she thought of the degradation of her mother, that former examplar of all that justified the existence of a cultured and noble class, when plunged into the spiritual solvent of this time which tried the souls of human beings beyond their powers of resistance.

She remembered what her father had said of the punctilious sense of honor of the Japanese nobility, and for a moment she suspected that he had been enrolled in a conspiracy to bring his daughter to the standard of conduct described in the newspaper clipping; but only for a moment did she harbor such distrust. He was too far gone in mental decay to be capable of the pursuit of any sustained object—and he would, even in his imbecile state, revolt from the sordid purpose of her mother. She could find no justification for Mrs. Krassin. The bitterness of her heart, when she thought of her, frightened her—the contamination of it all!

She was very lonely, and tried all the little devices to which her life had accustomed her to pass away the time. She opened the piano, rested her fingers on the keys, and without striking a note, closed it, and went wandering about the great high-ceilinged rooms. The piece she had been about to play was one of Ilya's favorites. She had slept for many nights after their visit to Loris, and now retired early, but not always to sleep. During the days she had been in a relaxed and passive state; but now it seemed as if it were her imperative duty to rise and do something.

Musia was letting things drift in this awful storm; and the thought tormented her. She saw nothing clearly. But thoughts, approaching visions, crowded her brain. Ilya, Vladimir, mother—the ideas were twisting, plaiting in chaos. Loris, too—she remembered him, with his handsome white hands as soft as her own, his small curled-up mustache almost brushing her lips—a distant, incomprehensible, persistent figure.

"I am sure he can save Ilya," she said, sitting up in bed and clasping her knees with her arms. "He is their idol—he must be; for see his superiority to the others! What he said about not having power was said in modesty; but he must have power. Compare him to Vilinsky! I must save Ilya, and must see Loris again; but saving Ilya will not decide my destiny. No matter how this great matter is solved, I cannot live in the same house with my mother any more. My life is spoiled. Where can I go? What can I do?"

How still the house was! It frightened her. She was approaching hysteria; and she wondered if her mind were not giving away. She wondered what her mother was doing. Perhaps she was searching for more passages in books and papers with which to corrupt her daughter's mind.

Musia softly slipped out of bed and softly went to her mother's door. It stood a little ajar, and a dim light was shining out along the floor in a broadening zone against the opposite wall of the passage. Musia paused before this opening and looked in. There was a faint light in the room, by which the girl could at first see nothing but a shrine over in the corner; but presently by the light of the tiny oil lamp burning before the shrine several orthodox ikons were revealed, and under them an indistinct figure on the floor.

It was her mother in her nightgown, kneeling in prayer.

Musia watched for a long time, but she scarcely stirred. The girl was no philosopher, and this glimpse into her mother's soul struck her with astonishment and wonder. She could not fathom the mystery of the female animal fighting for her offspring; and blindly endeavoring to use, at the same time, the weapons of the spirit, and of the world, the flesh and the devil against another child. The time may come when Musia will understand this; but then she was too young. But her hate lessened a little, as she got this glimpse of the awful struggle in the soul of another. Slowly straightening her tired body the girl crept back to the loneliness of her room.

CHAPTER XII

From Master to Slave

Sentries seemed stricken with blindness, as Musia walked along the railway platform, and then down on the cindered ground between the tracks on the occasion of her second visit to Loris—but then, this was the second visit. His car had been moved along the siding nearer to the main line, and, as before, the way seemed to be always kept clear for it to move out of the yards and out of Kazan.

A man in uniform pointed it out to her when she had paused in perplexity at its having vanished from the spot where she remembered it to have stood before. When she reached the car, the guard, a different type of man from the one on duty that other day, waved his hand for her to enter without any petition on her part. It was now growing dark, and as she stepped into the corridor, which was brilliantly lighted, she found herself alone; and there was no one in the reception room, which was dark, save for light coming in from the outside about the curtains, and a gleam shining from under the hanging across the doorway into the inner room.

Her heartbeats almost suffocated her. It seemed to her that anyone in the car might hear them.

There was none of the waiting here, either, which had marked the former visit; for before she had become accustomed to the strangeness of waiting thus for this myterious man, he threw back the hanging, and leaving the doorway open behind him, stepped lightly into the room and stood as if waiting for her to explain the object of her call upon him.

The incredibly grotesque situation struck her: she quaked as she thought of her being at the mercy of this stranger clothed with such sinister power, and reputed to be in the habit of making such destructive use of it. She felt a chill and shivered. He walked over to her as if he understood her thoughts and feelings, and was rather amused at them.

"So you came?"

She thought the words ironical, but there was no irony in his voice.

"Please be seated," said he, with a gesture toward the divan. "I was wondering if you would not come. I thought you might. I wanted you to come."

Her heart beat high with hope at his words. Why could he have wished her to come, save to give her good news of Ilya?

"Then you have good news for me?" she exclaimed. "Good news—of my brother?"

Fagotting Again

Very charming dresses for small girls are made entirely by hand. They are of white handkerchief linen combined with narrow strips of blue that are fagotted on at the neck and on the sleeve bands.

Feathers as Trimming

Small ornaments of flat, uncut ostrich feathers placed over the ears on tight-fitting hats of felt and velvet promise to be among the most important winter millinery trimmings.

Change in Skirts

For some time there has been noticeable a fullness in skirts. This has been gathered in front or the side fronts. Now we see designers gathering this fullness in the back, where it forms a distinctly bustlelike effect.

Amusing Sport Hats

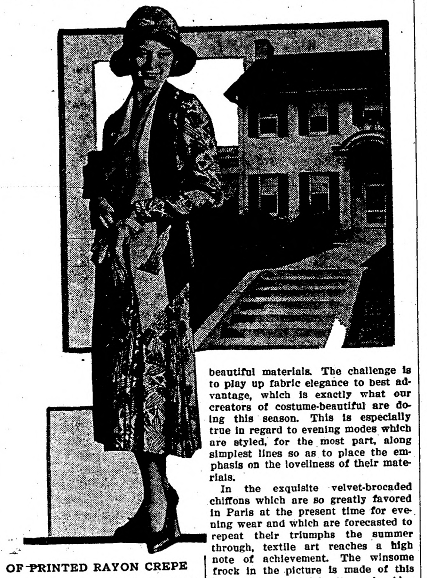
Very gay indeed are little hats of colored felt, with designs of embroidery upon one side. The designs, by a well-known artist, show young tennis players in action.

LATEST PATTERNS IN PRINTS COPY ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN

THE reproduction of objects surrounding us, beginning with the animal, floral, and later conventional designs, is as old as is textile art itself.

Realistic flowers, scrolls, twists and turns, pastoral and love scenes, turtledoves, interlocked rings, musical instruments and gardeners' tools, all depicted with grace and balance, found their way into textile patterns as far back as history relates.

All of which leads up to the very interesting data in regard to the handsome printed rayon crepe of which the striking frock in the picture is fashioned. When the salesperson calls attention to any of the prints which go to make up this series of patternings, you recognize at a glance the source of their inspiration, which is none other than one of the towering skyscrapers such as is America's proud boast, and which in this instance proves to be the tallest building in the world recently erected in New York.



OF PRINTED RAYON CREPE

One marvels at the skill of the artist who can symbolize so colossal a theme as attractively as these new prints portray, achieving effects which are not only exceedingly designful, but because of their distinct novelty add zest to the mode. The large designs seem particularly smart. The motifs vary from a striking silhouette of the building to a light-and-shadow impression which is especially good looking.

As to the scarf which adds a "touch that tells" to the frock illustrated, it is typical of the present style trend. The dress or coat or blouse which is minus a striking scarf or at least some sort of a "tricky" scarf neckline is the exception this season.

The mission of the new scarfs seems to be to emphasize startling color contrast. In order to accomplish this, materials are seamed together rather than contrasted through design. One might correctly describe them as being pieced together, for that is what they are, strips, diamond shapes, squares and triangles of silk, satin, sheer velvet or crepe in multi-colors ingeniously worked in modernistic design.

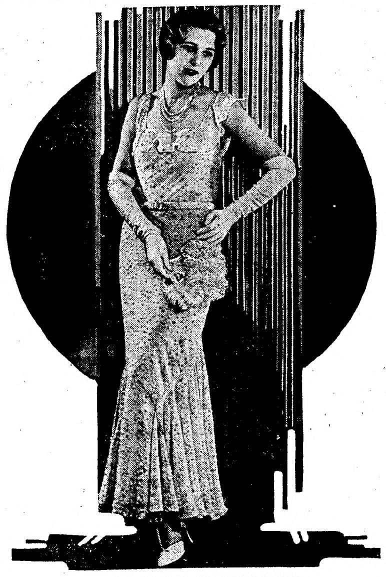
The scarf pictured seams a strip of black and a strip of white crepe weave together, thus complementing the black and white print which fashions the frock.

For Evening Wear.

Not within the memory of the present generation has the world of fashion been so richly endowed with beautiful materials. The challenge is to play up fabric elegance to best advantage, which is exactly what our creators of costume-beautiful are doing this season. This is especially true in regard to evening modes which are styled, for the most part, along simplest lines so as to place the emphasis on the loveliness of their materials.

In the exquisite velvet-brocaded chiffons which are so greatly favored in Paris at the present time for evening wear and which are forecasted to repeat their triumphs the summer through, textile art reaches a high note of achievement. The winsome frock in the picture is made of this enchanting material, its pale blue chiffon background brocaded with tiny velvet motifs in a slightly darker tone. Which reminds us that colorists in the style realm are in a mood to play up blue in every possible gradation and combination for spring and summer.

Note with what restraint the gown pictured is fashioned in order that nothing shall detract from the glory of its fabric. A tight silhouette is featured, which is very chic for this season. The biased skirt is raised high at the waist, for waistlines in general are growing noticeably higher. In connection with the new close-fitting lines it is correct for the fullness to begin at the knee as it so gracefully does in this instance. The bodice is very simple, low cut and square, with just a soft frill of self fabric.



A GORGEOUS EVENING GOWN

Adorable little jackets of these new velvet-brocaded chiffons will be worn this summer over frocks of monotone chiffon. One can readily see that the vogue for ensembles of this type is destined to become widespread. The brocade is available in not only light blue but in a delectable pink; also pale green.

FAMOUS Doctor's Way to move the Bowels

Do your bowels fail you occasionally? Are you a chronic sufferer from constipation and its ills? Then you will be interested to know of this method which makes the bowels help themselves.

Dr. Caldwell specialized on bowel ills. He treated thousands for constipation. The prescription he wrote so many times—which has been tested by 47 years' practice—can be had of any drugstore today. Its pleasant taste and the way it acts have made it the world's largest selling laxative.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is a skillful compound of laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other mild ingredients. Nothing in it to harm even a baby. Children like its taste. It acts gently, without griping or discomfort. So it is ideal for women or older people. But even the most robust man will find its action thorough, satisfying. The quick, certain benefits millions are securing from Syrup Pepsin proves a doctor knows what is best for the bowels.

Next time you feel bilious, headachy, bloated, gassy, or constipated take some Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and see how fine you feel the next day—and for days to come!

In 3 Months and Feels Years Younger

"I have been taking Kruschen Salts for nearly 3 months. I have continued taking one teaspoonful in warm water every morning. I then weighed 217 pounds, was always bothered with pains in my back and lower part of abdomen and sides.

"Now I am glad to say I am a well woman, feel much stronger, years younger and my weight is 170 pounds. I do not only feel better but I look better, so all my friends say.

"I shall never be without Kruschen Salts, will never cease taking my daily dose and more than glad to highly recommend it for the great good that is in it." Mrs. S. A. Solomon, New Bern, N. C., Jan. 1930. "P. S. You may think I am exaggerating by writing such a long letter but truly I feel so indebted to you for putting out such wonderful salts that I cannot say enough."

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts 4 weeks costs but 85 cents at druggists the world over. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast. Attention to diet will help—cut out pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—the Kruschen way is the safe way to lose fat. WOMEN SHOULD LEARN USES OF MAGNESIA

To women who suffer from nausea, or so-called "morning sickness," this is a blessing. Most nurses know it. It is advised by leading specialists: Over a small quantity of finely cracked ice pour a teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Sip slowly until you are relieved. It ends sick stomach or inclination to vomit.

Its anti-acid properties make Phillips' Milk of Magnesia quick relief in heartburn, sour stomach, gas. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement. Used as a mouthwash it helps prevent tooth decay during expectancy.

Seek Scientific Data in North

Two Polar Expeditions Under Mawson and Wilkins Are Ready to Go.

London.—The polar exploration season has opened. Sir Douglas Mawson has one in active execution; so has Sir Hubert Wilkins. Both are expeditions involving tremendous expense and also demanding great organizing ability.

Unlike the explorers of the old days, they need to be fitted with something more than stout hearts and warm clothing. The tales of the tremendous pluck and valor of the intrepid explorers are by far the more thrilling, while present-day hard, scientific trips are often never dilated upon.

These brave venturers do not sail the frozen seas of the North or South poles just for the honor and glory of sticking "Old Glory" or the "Union Jack" on a hitherto uncharted bit of frozen rock and ice.

All Kinds of Experts.

The small ships are staffed with every kind of scientific expert. Naturally there are the navigators and engineers, but in addition there are fishery experts, the ornithologists, geologists, geographers and zoologists.

A landing is made on some new piece of territory, the flag is planted, scientific navigating calculations are made by the ordinary navigators and the rest of the investigators set about their allotted tasks in their own peculiar ways.

The mountains will attract the geologists. Every mound and hillock will be subjected to a minute orographic examination.

The river beds—if any—will be examined by them, samples taken and careful data kept. Samples will be taken with great care for more minute examination by other experts at home.

Meanwhile ornithologists have been collecting and studying the birds that inhabit the land, while the zoologists have been making similar pertinent and exhaustive inquiries into the animal life. From this the purely mineral potentialities are calculated and the prospect of their commercial exploitation is considered.

Mineral Prospects.

The mineral prospects and possibilities of the Arctic and the Antarctic are as yet an unknown quantity to the world's scientists. But every fresh exploration brings back new knowledge of these unknown continents.

Perhaps, according to a British colonial office expert, the economic value of the minerals and animal and fishery life of the frozen continents will within our generation be as much an open book to the world in general as any building lot near any big city.

It is expected that then will begin the national rivalry as to ownership. Perhaps the League of Nations will appoint a polar land committee to decide some matters. The chief exploring countries at the moment are the United States of America, not a league member; Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries.

The latter have produced perhaps the most successful of all explorers in the Antarctic. But it has not been an empty glory for them. They have managed to corner most of the whaling industry.

For generations they have reigned supreme in this enterprise and they have to thank their exploratory seamen for this.

Wartime Romance Ends in Suicide of Officer

Philadelphia.—The wartime romance of a captain of the A. E. F. and a pretty French maid that culminated in their military wedding in Bordeaux, France, twelve years ago, came to a tragic end with the suicide of the broken-hearted bridegroom.

Abandoned by his bride and destitute, Capt. Charles F. Smith, the fifty-one-year-old husband, took his own life by gas in his furnished room here. His body was discovered by his landlady a few hours afterward.

Detectives probing the cause of the tragedy, learned that back in 1918 Smith, then commander of a convoy ship, married Marie, a little French girl, with whom he had fallen in love.

Later he brought his bride to America and obtained employment as a tugboat captain here.

Recently his wife withdrew their savings and fled. Despondent by his two losses, Smith, according to the detectives' version, decided to take his life.

Drought Relief Fund Gets Stolen Stock Certificate

St. Louis.—The committee in charge of Red Cross relief in this area has received a most unusual contribution. An anonymous donor has sent in a stock certificate worth $1,500 which was part of the loot in a downtown burglary last summer.

"My heart has been touched by the suffering of the drought victims. This may be a little help toward their relief. J. C." This was the message appended to the certificate.

Investigation proved that the certificate had been stolen and it was returned to its rightful owner.

INVENTS WAY OF PUTTING SUNLIGHT TO USE IN FOOD

Thirty-Year-Old Cincinnati Professor Perfects Use of Ultra Violet Ray.

New York.—A thirty-year-old scientist of the University of Cincinnati has perfected a process for putting vitamin D into foods, and for sterilizing foods.

He is George Sperti, and patents covering his invention have been sold by the university to the General Foods Corporation of New York. Profits go to the university for further research.

Professor Sperti applied the quantum theory of physics to biology. One of the most important applications of the scientist's discovery is the action of ultra-violet light in forming vitamin D. He explained his invention to Chester Morton, who writes about it in the Review of Reviews.

"'Years ago milk contained a pretty good quantity of vitamin D,' said Professor Sperti. 'Cows ate green plants which contained this quality and they themselves were out in the sunlight much of the time. Today, however, there is so much smoke and dirt in the air, even in the country, that cows no longer get the same amount of sunlight. Also, they are sometimes fed artificial food and as a result milk no longer contains a sufficient quantity of the vitamin.

"'Yet when milk was subjected to the ordinary ultra-violet ray the experiment was not successful, for while the vitamin was produced it was also destroyed, and undesirable changes in taste and odor occurred. Now the wave length of light at which the vitamin is produced is different from that at which it is destroyed and also from that at which other undesirable changes take place. By filtering the ultra-violet rays we can keep the beneficial ones and shut out the harmful. In this way milk can be made to contain vitamin D.'"

Arkansas County Has Cars, Engine for Sale

Walnut Ridge, Ark.—A white elephant in the form of a black engine, eight red box cars, and a crimson caboose is on the hands of Lawrence county officials.

The engine and cars were seized when the Frisco railroad refused to obey the demand of Lawrence county to construct sheds at Hoxie.

Following the decision of the Arkansas Supreme court in favor of complainants, who asked that the railroad company build the sheds, the Frisco refused to pay fines totaling $7,800 and fees of $8,000 demanded by the prosecuting attorney, and the county seized the train.

Bids were opened recently for the purchase of the engine and cars. Only 50 cents was offered. And Lawrence county still has a "white elephant" for sale

Sore THROAT

The daily press tells of increasing numbers of cases of sore throat. A sore throat is a menace to the person who has it, and to those around him. Don't neglect the condition. Check the soreness and the infection with Bayer Aspirin! Crush three tablets in ⅓ tumblerful of water and gargle well. You can feel the immediate relief. The soreness will be relieved at once. The infection will be reduced. Take Bayer tablets for your cold; and for relieving the aches and pains common to colds. Bayer Aspirin brings quick comfort in neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatism, etc. Get the genuine, with the Bayer cross on each tablet:

"First Aid—Home Remedy Week" Coming

Chicago.—First Aid-Home Remedy Week, Sterling Products' "better merchandising and greater advertising baby," celebrates its tenth anniversary March 15-21. Druggists everywhere will co-operate. "Fill That Medicine Chest Now!" is the slogan of action. The National Association of Retail Druggists sponsored the event in 1922, and with the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and National Association of Retail Drug Clerks have, with other organizations, massed their energies for success of this movement for the abolition of much needless suffering and often the salvage of life.

Dr. W. E. Weiss was first to okay the idea as a splendid aid to preparedness for unexpected illness or accident. This is stressed as sensible insurance for immediate relief.

The every-spring festival of sales is a fixture of housecleaning time. Sterling Products is giving a tenth anniversary surprise party to every druggist in America—for the Dominion as well as the States endorses this idea of a more intensive advertising effort in Drugdom. Replacing the old streamers there has been adopted a colorful poster representing a filled medicine chest displaying the slogan of each past success: "Fill That Medicine Chest Now."

Deserved Employment

Mizue Hiasa, a laborer, found employment at Osaka, Japan, after walking 200 miles from Tokyo, carrying his four-year-old child on his back. A newspaper publisher published his picture and a brother he had not seen for eight years recognized it. The brother's employer gave Hiasa a job.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

PICNICS—NOW AND THEN

OR, then and now—if you like. Now, we give these outings all sorts of new names and new occasions: the apple blossom luncheon with bridge tables under merry striped umbrellas; beach supper with music and dancing in the moonlight; companionate dinner, with each guest bearing in their car a different course, hot or cold, in thermos pack.

But, after all, they are very much the same old picnics, born of the out-of-door and food urge, which prompted mother to work late the night before, icing the cup cakes and deviling eggs, father to carry the basket and fishing tackle, and the whole family, basket and bundle laden, to meet the So and So's, likewise laden, at the street car station where mothers would invariably discover an alarming similarity in sandwiches and fathers look with concern at clouds gathering in the sky.

New Trend in Foods

But proof that "a good time was had by all," is the fact that annually we picnic. And when we think of picnics the first food that pops into our minds is sandwiches. True, sandwiches sound rather uninteresting, but they can taste very interesting and delicious if they follow the new trend which combines many things to produce either the appetizer type of sandwich—blended with cheese, pickles, capers and that sort of thing—or the sweet sandwich fillings which use fruit, nuts, honey and perhaps a bit of preserves.

As for the time-honored "deviled egg," it has developed from a mustard-salt-and-pepper seasoned affair into something that is more like a salad, using chopped olives, creamy mayonnaise, and bits of pimiento for stuffing, and nested in a lettuce heart like a bud among leaves.

For salads, the popular way is to use both fresh and canned fruits in unusual combinations, pack them into tightly-covered jars and take along lettuce wrapped in waxed paper, ready to serve with the salad.

Small cakes, such as petit fours, are replacing the old-time family layer cake for outings, because they are easier to carry and there is less waste, if one finds the helping too generous at the end of the feast.

Drinks—since the days when mother squeezed a few lemons and added sugar, depending on the water supply at the picnic grounds—have been very much on the up and up. The modern thermos jug contains fruit shakes and cocktails, punches and rickeys as deliciously blended and iced as if they were served at home.

How would you like to picnic with some of these good things?

Sardine and Olive Sandwich: Bone and mash one can of sardines. Mix with one tablespoon of chopped ripe olives, one tablespoon of lemon juice, two tablespoons of chopped pickled beets and three tablespoons of mayonnaise. Spread between thinly-sliced white bread.

Banana Pineapple Sandwiches: Mash two bananas, add one-fourth tablespoon of lemon juice, one-fourth cup of drained crushed pineapple and two tablespoons of honey. Add one-half cup of grated mild cheese or cream cheese. Cream well and use between buttered slices of brown bread.

Grapefruit and Grape Salad: Drain and chill one No. 2 can of grapefruit and one cup of seeded white grapes. Add chopped canned pimiento and chopped green pepper. Make a French dressing, using the grapefruit syrup instead of vinegar. Serve on lettuce hearts.

Cool and Colorful

Lime and Prune Punch: Mix together the juice from one No. 3 can of prunes and one-fourth cup of lime juice. Add two cups of water and chill.

Iced Orange Coffee: Wash two oranges and pare off a thin paring of the outer skin, being careful to get none of the white fibre. Boil one-half cup of sugar, one cup of water and the orange skin together for ten minutes. Cool, strain and add four cups of cold coffee. Just before serving add the juice from the two oranges and one-half cup of evaporated milk. Chill thoroughly.

Potato and Pea Salad: Marinate very thoroughly one No. 2 can of peas and two cups of diced boiled potatoes in French dressing. Add one-half cup of diced pickled beets and one tablespoon of chopped onion, and moisten with mayonnaise. Serve in lettuce nests.*

Oil and Tar Lower

Minnesota will buy road oil and tar at prices substantially lower than a year ago, according to Commissioner C. M. Babcock. Bids were opened last week on furnishing and applying 12,700,000 gallons of material. The Highway department took bids on 630 miles of new treatment and retreatment of 822 miles of roads previously treated. The total costs of these jobs will be about $125,000 less than if the 1930 prices had prevailed.

While prices vary in different localities, due to freight rates, length of haul and other local conditions, the average prices on material and application were almost as low as the 1930 prices on material alone. On some projects the 1931 cost of material and application will be less than the 1930 cost of material.

Low bids on road oil, in tank cars at nearest station, averaged 4.849 cents per gallon and on tar 9.978 cents per gallon. The 1930 prices averaged 5.57 cents on oil and 10.88 cents on tar. Low bids on application average 1.14 cents per gallon this year, compared to 1.39 in 1930. Taking material and application together, prices on tar were 1.16 cents per gallon lower, and prices on oil 0.87 cents per gallon less than last year.

1930 Auto Tags Will Be "Out" April the First

The time when 1930 automobile licenses can be used will soon come to an end, a Highway bulletin reminds us. Next Tuesday March 31 is the last date when the old plates may be used. The Legislature recently passed a bill reducing the penalties for delayed registration, but those who want to take advantage of this act should keep their cars home. It is presumed that those who have money to buy gas also have money to buy up-to-date licenses, and the law against operating a car with old plates after March 31 will be strictly enforced.

Minnesota is one of the most liberal states in permitting the use of the old plates until March 61. Only two other states permit the use of either old or new plates during a period as long as three months. More than half of the states require every car to have new plates Jan. 1, and a few grant extensions of thirty or sixty days.

An ad a day keeps the wolf away.

School Notes

High School

We are all looking forward to our longed-for Easter vacation.

The members of the English I class are making booklets on the play "The Merchant of Venice" and find the work very interesting.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

We have gotten some samples in our room and are having a contest to get health badges.

Gertrude Nygaard is absent on account of a cold.

We have music only once a week now.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

We are busily working on exhibits which we will have the week following Easter Vacation. We hope we will have many visitors at that time.

The first and second graders have invited us to an Easter program. Will the Easter Bunny be there?

The 6th grade entertained the 5th grade with a varied radio program on Wednesday.

Third and Fourth Grades

From the looks of things, there are evidently surprises in store for us on Friday.

The third and fourth grades broadcasted their second Weekly Reader program last Friday afternoon. The programs are improving each time.

First and Second Grades

Our visitors for Friday were: Harriet Wahlin, Marion Olson, Yvonne Redal, Pierce Hanson, Genieve Larson, Roy Johnson, Dorothy Hanson.

We are all glad to see the snow go again. It seems more like spring is really here. No one has seen any more birds lately.

Notice of Annual Meeting

The Annual Meeting of the Farmer & Village Switchboard Co., will be held at the Community Hall at Holt Monday, April 6th, at 1 p. m., for the purposes of electing officers and transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting.

T. B. Folden, Sec'y.

Four Wheel Trailers Need License

Minnesota Highway patrolmen report finding a large number of trailers which need the 1931 license plates. Although the present law has been in force more than two years, a great many trailer owners apparently do not know that every trailer, except a two wheel trailer of less than 1000 pounds used with a pleasure car, must have a 1931 license.

Many old cars are being made over into four wheel trailers for hauling farm products and other merchandise. Under the law they must be licensed. The fee on a trailer under one ton capacity is $2.00.

Edgar Horien Sells Dray

Edgar Horien, who has operated the local dray line the past year has again sold out his again sold out his interests to Theo. Ness from whom he had purchased it. Mr. Horien will this week go to Easton, Minn., where he will run a farm for his uncle.

Arthur Thompson will take charge of the dray line for Mr. Ness.

Pennington county will not have a county agent next year according to the informal ballots handed out an the township elections in two of their commissioner districts recently. They will no doubt change their mind after the agent is gone.

Alma Creamery Stops

According to a report coming to us from the territory of the Alma creamery located between Newfolder and Argyle, the patron and stockholders of that creamery have decided to discontinue operation for one year and will now join up with the Warren creamery.

N. S. A. News

One hundred and thirteen students are listed for graduation from the Northwest School of Agriculture, where commencement activities are being held this week. According to Supt. A. A. Dowell, this is the largest graduating class in the history of the school, surpassing the previous record by over thirty percent.

Of the 1000 students who have graduated from the Northwest School since it was established a quarter of a century ago, over 80 percent have returned to the land as farmers and home makers.

The commencement sermon was delivered in the new auditorium last Sunday, with the inter-society declamatory contest Monday evening; reception to graduating class, Tuesday evening; concert recital by the Department of Music, Wednesday, and commencement day activities, Thursday. The Commencement address was delivered on Thursday evening by Dr. John W. Holland, St. Paul. His subject was "Life's True Measure".

The following students from Marshall county are included in the list of graduates: Marie Bjerken, Goodridge; Agnes Lundin, Stephen; John Pearson, Middle River; Lloyd Ross, Alvarado; Ingolf Swanson, Alvarado; Lawrence Omundson, Radium.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad and loving memory of our dear father and husband, Mr. C. Rustad, who passed away one sad year ago March 29, 1930. You've gone, dear father, to a land of peace and rest, but your love still lingers in our hearts, as we think of you each day; and also for Robert, who is with you there. Our home has been so lonely; there is no one who can fill your two vacant places in our home. We hope we shall meet again some day.

"Know What Your Cows Are Doing"

When you begin to make a careful study of what your cows are doing; according to the production of each individual cow, and what each one eats, you are on the right road to successful dairying.

Give each cow a name or number, keep a record of what she eats, and how much she gives. If you don't care to join a testing association or are out of the territory of one, bring your milk in to your buttermaker to have it tested. He will be glad to do it for you and give you advice about feeding your cows.

Study your cows and watch your profits grow.

Amazes Mother

"Bobbie's stomach was often upset and he suffered a lot from colds," says Mrs. P. S. Fletcher, Jr., 4410 W. 30th St., Los Angeles, Cal. "We found he was constipated.

"Mother used California Fig Syrup, so we gave Bobbie some. He amazed me by the quick way he became strong, energetic, well again. His bowels act freely now, and his digestion is splendid."

The quick, safe way to cleanse and regulate the bowels of bilious, headachy, constipated children is with California Fig Syrup. Every child loves it. It has the full endorsement of doctors. Appetite is increased by its use; digestion is assisted; weak stomach and bowels are given tone and strength.

Look for the word California on the carton. That marks the genuine, famous for 50 years.

A TONIC AND NERVINE FOR MOTHERS

Wilton, Wis.—"Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest help to motherhood of any medicine I know of. It is also a tonic and nervine that cannot be surpassed. I have taken the 'Prescription' during expectancy and when I did, I got along so much better than when I did not take it, for it always kept me feeling so well and strong. It is marvelous the way it strengthens a woman and keeps her nerves in good condition."—Mrs. Amanda Visger, Route 2, c/o Art Green, Druggists.

But there was no encouragement in his face in response to her query. There was disappointment in it, and just a shade of the annoyance of a man who finds a conversation on matters of interest to him turned off upon things which are an old, old story—some of the annoyance of the official who has heard petitions and requests all day long, and wants to be rid of them.

"No," he said shortly. "I have no news at all on that matter. I am sorry. I want to help your brother, because he is your brother. I hope it will turn out, if I save him, that he is a little like his sister."

He walked several times the length of the room while she waited for that which she thought he must be preparing to say about Ilya. His words of compliment to her she had already forgotten.

He was not thinking of Ilya at all. He was pondering on his own situation, and hers, on the new conditions of their lives, of the truth of the saying that nobody may know what a day may bring forth, of the preciousness of this hour, and in his strange life, of every hour, of the necessity of doing in an hour what in other times might consume months or years. Of the importance of cutting knots.

He halted before her and looked down into her eyes lifted pleadingly to his, and then he sat down by her side.

"I loved you from the first moment I saw you," said he eagerly.

"This is no time—" said she haughtily.

"No time," he interrupted, "for waiting to woo; no time for wooing. I thought of that before I spoke. Do you remember the story of the man in the French revolution, the common fellow, who was bound face to face to a lady of high birth, and thrown together with her into the river? Though drowning, he fell in love with her, and thanked God for the great privilege. I am like that. Even in this maelstrom I have fallen in love with you!"

"This," said she, "—this is insanity, sir. You thought the other day—"

"I dishonored you in my thoughts," he supplied for her. "Won't you pardon me? I was misled—by circumstances and appearances. How could I know—I should have known at the first glance. But even when I misjudged you, I loved you—and I was angry. The thing seemed so base, and so beautiful. I would have taken you on any plane high or low—until after you—you repelled me. That lifted you up in the— I shall always keep that sword among my treasures. It made you known to me. If it—if anything could only make me known to you!"

Was there a half-smile on Musia's face at the remembrance? Her excitement was mounting higher every moment.

"You have conquered my heart, my mind, my admiration, my love. I watched you as you went away with—do not stay with her! I cannot exist without you—you are everything!"

There was in his voice and manner those elements which move the hearer; the heat of a powerful passion, in his tones the vibration which sways the passions of others, something that told of his feeling that he was staking much on this desperate appeal, something very tender and winning in the dark face bent toward her in the half-light. She? She lowered her eyes, and with her fingers played with her dress like a schoolgirl receiving her first proposal. Even under all the circumstances, such an avowal from such a man meant something to Musia.

"I will do anything to win you," he went on. "I am capable of doing anything to win you. Who am I? You say I am a commissar of the Bolsheviki. Yes; I am just a Russian of some mind and some power shaken out of the old life, unsure of tomorrow, with no firm ground under my feet. I am Russia! I am a man who has lived long among people who have lost the sense of what is white, what black, what right, what wrong—I am a soul on trial, wandering in Chaos and Night. So are you. Who is not? Who is not lost in this whirlpool, stirred up by Satan, of the elements of hell? Kings today—tomorrow dust . . . I wish I had a little more time for making you love me!"

Silence for a long time; it seemed to her a very, very long time. She had no idea what to do. She had forgotten her errand for a moment in this bizarre crisis in her own affairs. Loris started up and resumed his walk to and fro across the floor.

"Can you believe and trust me?" he asked. He waited with his eyes fixed tenderly on her expressionless face. "Can you not love me a little?"

She felt a sense of guilt as the thought of her brother's peril, for her errand swept back into her consciousness; and all at once this lovemaking, this man making love to her, became repugnant to her. She felt as she had done when she took the sword in her hands; and yet her mind told her that she ought to be friendly with Loris, to show trust in him for Ilya's sake, and even for her own safety. But she could find no words in which to reply. She could not force herself to utter a syllable. A physical disgust for herself, for this man with whom she had come to plead, for her whole questionable position took possession of her.

He watched her questioningly, and seemed to know what she felt: for his expression changed. Anger flushed his face—the anger of love denied; and the cruelty of passion replaced the kind and gentle tenderness of a moment ago. Passions like his have filled the world with murders. He reached the divan with a stride and seized her hand.

"Ah!" he said in a low, hoarse tone, his hands pressing hers until she winced. "You hate me!"

She compressed her pale lips, but uttered no word of denial or protest.

Her passiveness provoked him, and he became the man of that former day. Who was this slip of a girl to treat with silence and contempt the man before whom so many trembled?

Love, anger of love denied, and the pride which in such natures as his blows such anger to flame, combined to render him half insane and wholly reckless—and to see her sit thus impassive!

He threw himself upon the divan beside her, took her in his arms, pressed her passionately to his breast, and kissed her—with the brutality of a cave man. And then he was calmed by the fact that she did not resist. With lips tightly closed she lay in his arms, calm, cold, impassive. His storm of passion passed in a moment.

"I am a brute!" he whispered, still holding the yielding form, so small, so slight, in his arms. "I went mad—for fear of losing you. I love you! Let me try to make you understand how much I love you, and perhaps you can forgive me. I want to marry you and take you away with me. Only consent! We will leave all this for ever!"

It was some comfort to him afterward, that she lay in his arms all this time, quite conscious. If she would only speak! If she would only look up into his eyes!

"Of course you cannot trust me," he went on, still whispering in her ear; "but I would give my life for you. I would give my life to take back the pain I have given you."

Musia did not move or protest or make reply.

"I want to help your brother," he went on. "I wanted to help him from the time of the first glimpse I ever had of you, darling! But the prisoners are not under my control. They are in the hands of the sailors—and the sailors suspect me and spy upon me. Those on the outside think I am all-powerful; but perhaps my days are numbered also— But what do you care!"

He paused for a gesture, or a tremor of her body as a sign that she had heard, but none came. Softly he placed her upon the divan and rising stood before her.

"I do not know," he exclaimed despairingly, "how to make you believe!"

She made an effort to rise, but sank back from weakness. He took her hand and raised her to her feet.

With no expression in her voice she said, "Allow me to go."

Obediently he dropped her hand, walked to the door and opened it for her. He saw her going from his life for ever, and the intolerable pain of the thought showed in his face. She remembered it afterward. Never to see her again! It seemed that unless he could see her every hour it would be impossible to live.

And yet two hours would measure all the time he had ever passed in her presence.

"I love you," said he once more, stooping over her, looking into her eyes, asking, beseeching, solicitous not to lose one instant of this precious time. "As long as they will let me, I shall be waiting for you here every moment. You will come? Will you?"

She slipped past him and passed from the car without a word. When morning broke, Loris was still sitting there on the divan.

Fagotting Again

Very charming dresses for small girls are made entirely by hand. They are of white handkerchief linen combined with narrow strips of blue that are fagotted on at the neck and on the sleeve bands.

Feathers as Trimming

Small ornaments of flat, uncut ostrich feathers placed over the ears on tight-fitting hats of felt and velvet promise to be among the most important winter millinery trimmings.

Change in Skirts

For some time there has been noticeable a fullness in skirts. This has been gathered in front or the side fronts. Now we see designers gathering this fullness in the back, where it forms a distinctly bustlelike effect.

Amusing Sport Hats

Very gay indeed are little hats of colored felt, with designs of embroidery upon one side. The designs, by a well-known artist, show young tennis players in action.

Old Fertilizers Coming Into Use

Many Less Common Elements Considered Nonessential Find Favor.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)—WNU Service.

Although fertilizers have generally been considered complete with only the principal plant food elements, nitrogen, phosphorus, and potash, the United States Department of Agriculture has found that many of the less common elements heretofore considered nonessential or present in the soil in sufficient quantities may deserve a place in the fertilizer bag.

Deficient in Elements.

In large areas in the United States some of the soils are deficient in manganese, sulphur, iron magnesium, and chlorine. Experiments in the greenhouses have shown beneficial plant-growth responses to applications of copper, boron, iodine, zinc, arsenic, barium, nickel, and other less common elements.

The everglades and east coast regions of Florida, where trucking is the chief form of agriculture, have been found deficient in manganese and have been made highly productive by application of about 50 pounds of manganese sulphate an acre. Within the last two years this new fertilizer has come into general use. It has been credited in some cases, with improving the yield of tomatoes by 175 to 450 crates an acre, the yield of beans by 3¼ tons an acre, the yield of cabbage by 42,107 pounds an acre, and the yield of potatoes by 180 bushels an acre. It has trebled and quadrupled the size of carrots and beets and doubled the size of cauliflower.

Chlorine Helps.

On light sandy soils in some tobacco-growing regions an application of 20 to 30 pounds of chlorine per acre, in the form of muriate of potash, improves the yield, quality, and drought resistance of the crop.

A large proportion of the light sandy tobacco soils are deficient in magnesium and at least 10 to 20 pounds per acre of this element must be included in the fertilizer if a normal crop is to be obtained. Magnesium deficiency produces characteristic symptoms in the plant and the condition is popularly known as sand drown.

Sweet Clover Pastures of Important Benefit

"All in all the benefits from sweet clover under pasture are largely due to the uneaten residues left on the soil, to roots left in the soil, to the general improvement of the physical condition of the soil and to the suppression of weeds by pasturing," states H. L. Walster, in charge of agronomy work at the North Dakota Agricultural college.

"Under pasturing there is a considerable return of nitrogen through both the liquid and the solid manure left in the field by the live stock. The liquid manure, however, is subject to rapid nitrification and leaching so that it is unlikely to be of any material benefit to the succeeding crop, while the solid manure is unevenly distributed and some leaching losses take place in it, also."

Just what are the effects of pasturing as compared to the effects of other treatments upon the soil moisture conditions is not known, Dr. Walster says. It seems likely that a closely pastured sweet clover field does not draw as much water from the soil as when two crops of hay are taken.

Starve the Rats Best Way to Control Pests

The best way to control rats is to make it "unhealthy and unpopular" for them—and this can be done in a number of different ways, says State Veterinarian Dr. Homer A. Wilson of the Missouri state board of agriculture.

The first and best thing to do is, when building, construct in a rat-proof way. The extra cost amounts to little, and the protection thus obtained will many times pay for the trouble and additional expense.

Rats must have food and shelter, and if the buildings are rat-proof they will be handicapped. This is a year when we should try to starve the rats!

Consumer of Lamb Not Interested in Weight

The consumer of lamb is not interested in whether a lamb can be made to weigh 100 pounds in 100 days or if it weighs 50 pounds. He is, however, concerned about the size of the various cuts. The quality, flavor and appearance of the meat are matters which do concern him very much. The economy of the feed yard only affects him as it is passed on in the price he must pay for his chops or leg of lamb. The same parallel might be drawn for wool. The consumer knows and cares but little about the breed, but he knows what he wants in wearing apparel and pays accordingly.

Standard Crate

To make a standard potato crate have slats 17 and 14 inches with 12-inch posts, says Prof. E. V. Hardenburg of the New York State College of Agriculture. With 1-inch square posts and ⅜-inch slats, the inside dimensions are 16¼ by 14 by 12 inches deep. Such a crate holds a legal bushel of 60 pounds; for estimating bin capacity it occupies 1¼ cubic feet.

Grain Rusts Formed by Natural Crossing

New Importance Given to Barberry Eradication.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)—WNU Service.

The reason certain rust-resistant varieties of wheat and rye lose their resistance to stem rust is that new hybrid forms of rust constantly arise.

Dr. Moses N. Levine and Dr. Ralph U. Cotter, pathologists of the United States Department of Agriculture, suspected that new rust forms were originating by the interbreeding of old forms and were overstepping the bounds of resistance of certain so-called resistant varieties of both wheat and rye not formerly damaged by either parent rust. The reaction of this hybrid was almost identical with that of a rust, described in 1911 and scientifically termed Puccinia graminis Hordei, which, the scientists now assume, originated by a similar process of hybridization in nature.

The discovery gives new importance to barberry eradication throughout the wheat belt, for it is while the rust spores inhabit the barberry leaf that various strains interbreed and create new hybrids. For many years it has been common knowledge that stem rust survives in northern wheat-growing regions only by means of the stage produced on barberry bushes. In warmer regions rust can survive without barberry bushes. It now becomes evident that no plant breeder can be sure his new variety of wheat or rye will remain resistant to rust in the presence of barberry bushes on which new hybrid forms of rust may arise.

Care of Young Turkeys Is of Much Importance

When the poults are very young the hen should be placed in an enclosure made over four boards a foot wide and twelve or fourteen feet long set on edge and well nailed together to prevent falling. In a week the little turks will learn the call of the hen and not be so likely to follow moving objects and thereby become chilled. When the hen is first turned out, care must be exercised not to let her go to a branch or get in swampy land. Until poults are six or eight days old, they seem to relish and to grow on rolled oats and chopped grass or soy bean leaves. They should have all the clean sour milk they will drink. After ten days they may be gradually given cottage cheese, dry bread crumbs and wheat bran. A change of feed for turkeys should always be made by mixing with a former food or they may refuse to eat enough to keep up the growth of body so important to combat disease.

If turks are to be allowed to range, at an early age, they may be turned into a pasture field where the grass is short and it is dry. They soon follow the mother hen and in a few days they will come up for food at any regular time. They always come in before night if they find food waiting.

Cattle Feeding Has No Definite or Set Rules

Cattle feeding is a business that does not adapt itself to any definite rules. About the only thing that is certain is that conditions change. Because Farmer Jones did it this way, or that way, with success, is not sufficient reason for assuming that his plan will repeat on his farm or your farm.

To be a successful cattle feeder, learn all you can about the business from different sources, and then fit these different factors into your own farm conditions as best you can. Nobody knows what the future market will be. On a rising market it is well to have your neighbor's corn in your cattle, but on a mean market too much of the other fellow's corn may ruin the feeder.

FARM NOTES

Call upon your grocer to save you a few shallow boxes for seed flats.

One dollar invested in 18 per cent bulk superphosphate to mix with manure can be counted on to return from $5 to $8 in increased crops.

* * *

Try some pole beans this year as a space economizer. One pole occupies little more space than one hill of bush beans and gives a vastly greater supply of beans.

When the horses are allowed one feed a day of good alfalfa or clover hay, with all the other roughage they will eat, no grain will be required until the last few weeks before spring work begins.

Corn silage, up to ten or fifteen pounds per day, is good for horses. It should be fed with some good hay, however. Moldy silage must be avoided as it is poisonous to horses and frequently causes death.

* * *

Plant a better string bean this year than you did last if last year's showed any signs of strings. There are real stringless string beans now. Look over the catalogues of reliable seed houses. They will tell you.

* * *

With feed scarce in many sections and grain costs relatively high coupled with the unsatisfactory cattle market, there may be a tendency for feeders to cut their feeding period short rather than lengthen it.

Ease in 5 Minutes—Comfort in 5 Hours

Muscular-Rheumatic Aches and Pains

DRAW them out with a "counter-irritant." Distressing muscular lumbago, soreness and stiffness—generally respond pleasantly to good old Musterole. Doctors call it a "counter-irritant," because it gets action and is not just a salve. Musterole helps bring soreness and pain to the surface, and thus gives natural relief. You can feel how its warming action penetrates and stimulates blood circulation. But do not stop with one application. Apply this soothing, cooling, healing ointment generously to the affected area once every hour for five hours. Used by millions for over 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses.

Keep Musterole handy; jars and tubes.

To be a Healthy Woman watch your Bowels!

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients. It doesn't sicken or weaken you. No restrictions of habit or diet are necessary while taking it. But its action is thorough. It carries off the sour bile and poisonous waste. It does everything you want it to do. It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow.

When you've a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all druggists keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

Tree That Has Changed Maps

Cinchona, Source of Quinine, Has Given 300 Years of Service to Man.

Washington.—Cinchona, source of quinine, whose 300 years of service to civilized man was recently celebrated, has probably done more than any other tree to change the map of the world, according to a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"The bark of this once unknown tree that grew wild in the forests of South America has made habitable to white men thousands of tropical areas that formerly were death traps," says the bulletin.

"The powerful enemy that cinchona fights so successfully is malaria. Before the discovery of cinchona and its action, little could be done to combat 'ague,' 'marsh fever,' and 'jungle fever,' as malaria was called. It attacked tens of millions of persons in the tropics and the warmer and moist regions of the temperate zones, and caused millions of deaths. It is believed by some historians that malaria, nurtured in the marshes of the Campagna, had an important part in bringing about the fall of Rome.

"In Greece, too, this energy-sapping disease is supposed to have played an insidious role; and there are some who explain the passing of the mysterious Maya civilization of Central America as a surrender to the joint attacks of malaria and yellow fever.

Malaria Dangerous Enemy.

"It was when white men began to live in the tropical countries that they came to realize that malaria (or the various aliases under which it passed) was an exceedingly dangerous enemy. Many of the early colonists in Mexico, Central and South America, India and the East Indies died of the disease. And then the tropics at least partially squared their debt by furnishing the one drug so far discovered that can successfully combat malaria.

"The cinchona tree was first found growing wild in forests on the mountain slopes of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia. Tradition has it that the value of the bark in treating malarial fever was first discovered when some fever-stricken Indians drank from a pool into which a cinchona tree had fallen, and were cured.

"Medicine made from cinchona bark was first used in treating white sufferers from fever in northern Peru (now Ecuador) about 1630. After it saved the life of the Countess of Chinchon, wife of the viceroy of Peru, in 1638 its fame grew rapidly. It is to this happy cure that the tree owes its name, for in honor of the countess, Linnaeus named it Cinchona, inadvertantly dropping the first 'h.'

"The powdered bark was soon afterward introduced into Spain and other parts of Europe where it was known as 'Countess powder' and 'Jesuits' powder.' The latter name was attached to it because much of it was taken to the Old World, distributed by members of the religious order returning from America. In England it was advertised as 'Feaver Bark.' A marked demand developed and within a century or so the shipment of the bark from northwestern South America became an important industry. The demand for more and more bark resulted in the destruction of all cinchona trees in reasonable reach of civilized centers, and there seemed danger that the trees might be exterminated.

Java Now Center for Cinchona.

"But the world had become so dependent on the bitter drug from cinchona that botanists and merchants and statesmen combined to save the industry by transplanting it. Plants and seeds were collected about the middle of the Nineteenth century (in many cases secretly) and transported to India, Ceylon, and Java. The industry failed in Ceylon, but Java is now the world's chief producer of cinchona with India second in importance. Relatively small quantities of the bark are now exported from South America.

"By Nature's strange chemistry there is manufactured in the bark of certain species to the cinchona tree a substance—quinine—that is sure death to the tiny microscopic parasites that, living in the blood, cause malaria. The drug also has a preventive effect, so that it is indispensable to both sufferers from malaria and those who will be exposed to the disease. The Indian government finds quinine so important that it maintains extensive groves of cinchona, fosters its growth by private horticulturists, and operates factories in which quinine is extracted from the bark. Finally the government uses its postal machinery to help distribute the medicine so that one may purchase it as easily as he can buy a stamp."

Woman Practices Dentistry at 92

Pomerory, Ohio.—Dr. Amy L. Whaley, believed to be the oldest practicing woman dentist in America, recently celebrated her ninety-second birthday.

Doctor Whaley employs a registered dentist, a laboratory expert and an office assistant, but she personally supervises all work.

Youth Has Fun on 15 Cents, but Goes to Jail

Braddock, Pa.—With only 15 cents to spend and an indomitable desire to be amused, Leonard Yerec, nineteen, demonstrated that the high cost of fun can be ridiculously low.

Yerec, who lives in Braddock, went to a nearby town. With one nickel he ordered a taxicab sent around to 821 Washington avenue. With a second nickel another cab was sent, and the third jitney brought the Braddock fire department with $50,000 worth of fire-fighting equipment to the front of his home.

About this time a neighbor looked out and put in the last call. It was for the police. Yerec was given 30 days.

NEW INSTRUMENT MEASURES WITHIN .00004 OF AN INCH

Optical Coincidence Guage of High Accuracy Perfected by Government Expert.

Washington.—A new instrument which makes measurements so accurately that it is apt to be out not more than four hundred-thousandths (.00004) of an inch one way or the other and does it without touching the parts being guaged, has been developed by Dr. I. C. Gardner, of the United States bureau of standards here.

It is called an optical coincidence guage. One eyepiece which will magnify 85 diameters, prisms to change the direction of sight and adjusting lens make up this novel instrument.

The operator looks into the eyepiece, focuses it, by careful adjustment makes two points, the distance between which is being measured, appear to be in almost the same spot.

He then reads on a scale the distance between these spots accurate within four hundred-thousandths of an inch. The instrument is so ruggedly constructed and so easy to operate that such accuracy is reached in routine measurements.

One application of this long distance measuring is the finding of the exact size of a piece of casting which has just been poured from molten metal and before it has cooled enough to be touched.

If the optical guage is fitted with a periscope system, measurements can be made far in the interior of hollow castings where it would be impossible or very difficult to take a mechanical measuring instrument.

Even the thickness of a coat of paint can readily be found with the new optical guage. The diameter of a precision grinding wheel or lathe can also be accurately determined without stopping the machine.

Slotted Wing Device to Reduce Airplane Crashes

East St. Louis, Ill.—An airplane safety device predicted to eliminate 80 per cent of air accidents, is the invention of Jean Francis DeVillard, candidate for mayor of East St. Louis.

According to the inventor, the device is a slotted wing with bifold flaps. The slots are located on the entering edge and the flaps on the trailing edge. They will operate automatically.

"This device," DeVillard said, "will prevent a tail spin, stalling of plane, and nose dive. It will float a plane at 30 miles an hour. It is impossible to float a plane at the present time.

"Equipped with the slots, the plane will take off in 40 feet and land in 25. The landing speed will be 18 miles per hour as compared to 40 now," DeVillard claims.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

Can't PLAY Can't REST —child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

TIME TO DRINK

IT'S time to fill the glasses again. Whether your scene is set out on the terraced gardens of your Estate-by-the-Sea, whether it's a roof up with the stars looking down on the Work-a-day-World, or whether it's just an engaging nook in your tiny apartment looking out over a window-box of red geraniums—it's high time to bring out the tall glasses and pour some tall drinks.

And such a dazzling list of new things in glasses for this season's hostess to add to her repertoire! For each season brings its new drinks, while the drinks of yesteryear "fold their tents like the Arabs." Settings for serving the summer drink are novel and alluring too. For the sun-room, low wicker chairs and a table no higher than the average coffee table, a sheer organdie table cover in pastel shades, crystal in lovely orchid, wild rose, or cerulean blue; for the garden, gaily-painted metal table and chairs and perhaps a cloth of interesting peasant ancestry.

Glorified Ice Tea

Even ice-cubes have gone modern this year, and instead of ice that looks like ice, we shall see blocks of ruby-red and emerald-green floating about in our ice tea. For ice tea, of course, remains—even in a fickle era of drinks. To make the new ice-cubes, simply pour fruit coloring—and flavoring, too, if you like—in your ice-cube tray. A glorified ice tea floats cubes of raspberry color and flavor, and a new rickey retains its mint in green colored and flavored cubes.

A very tricky way of imbibing summer beverages, and one which has a future, especially with the younger set who like to linger over the glasses between tennis sets, is to use sticks of lemon candy, instead of straws. A limeade, for example, through a lemon stick is something to become truly meditative over.

And for that "bite" that goes with the drinks, arrayed on generous glass platters matching the glasses, try some unusual open-face sandwiches cut in crescent and diamond shapes. Golden cheese, a bit snappy, on toasted muffins or bread slices sautéed, topped with a stuffed olive; creamy white cheese with criss-cross strips of red pimiento on wholewheat fingers; anchovies curled around egg slices and embedded in mayonnaise on toast triangles—these are the tid-bits that invite "just one more drink" and merrily prolong the party.

For your approval, these are some of the recent arrivals among drinks:

Havana Special: Mix the contents of one 10-ounce can of grapefruit juice with one cup of pineapple syrup; add one-fourth cup of sugar and one cup of water which have been boiled together and then cooled. Chill. Add one bottle of white rock, and serve ice-cold in punch glasses.

Four Fruit Fizz: Have the following ingredients ice-cold; the juice from one No. 3 can of fresh prunes, one cup of pineapple syrup, one cup of orange juice, one-fourth cup of lemon juice and two bottles of charged water. Mix all together and serve over cracked ice.

Punches with a "Punch"

Cherry Rickey: Boil one-fourth cup of sugar with one cup of water; cool. Add the following: one 8-ounce can of grapefruit juice, juice from one No. 2 can of sour, pitted cherries, one-fourth cup of maraschino cherry juice. Add one bottle of White Rock and serve ice cold. (The grapefruit and cherries which are left will make a delicious fruit salad on hearts of lettuce with French dressing.)

Coffee Punch: Mix one cup of strong coffee, one cup of orange juice and the juice from one can of grapefruit and one cup of maple syrup. Chill. Just before serving add one quart of ginger ale and two cups of heavy cream. This makes almost three quarts.

Sour Cherry Cordial: Simmer one cup of sugar and one cup of water to make a syrup. Add two cups of tea, one cup of orange juice and one-half cup of lime juice. Press the contents of a No. 2 can of red pitted cherries through a sieve, and use both the cherry pulp and juice. Just before serving, add one quart of ginger ale. This makes almost three quarts.*

78 Counties Gain In Trunk Route Funds

Trunk highway expenditures during the ten years the plan has been in effect, have exceeded motor vehicle and gas tax payments in 78 of the 87 counties in the state, according to figures given out this week by Commissioner C. M. Babcock. In at least five of the nine counties where receipts to date exceed expenditures, this credit balance will be wiped out by work now under contract or contemplated for this year.

In Marshall county, according to figures furnished the NEWS by Mr. Babcock, total expenditures on the trunk highways to date have been $1,230,876.00. This includes money spent for construction, maintenance, and interest and the principal on reimbursement bonds. The payments from this county into the trunk highway fund totals up to $653,532.00, motor vehicle taxes being based on the Secretary of State's figures and the gas taxes estimated on the basis of the number of cars in the county. The one-third of the gas tax which goes to the county is not included in the figures. The figures cover the period from May 1, 1931, when the new plan went into effect, to Dec. 31, 1930.

"The purpose of the trunk highway plan was to build roads according to traffic demands, without regard to county lines," Mr. Babcock said. "The benefits a county receives are not confined to the money spent within the county. The people in each county make use of the highways in all the other counties of the state. Roads outside a county bring a lot of tourist and other business into the county.

"The law, however, requires us to keep a record of expenditures in each county, as a matter of public information. These records show that in thirty four counties, expenditures exceed the payments into the the trunk highway fund by more than a million dollars, and in forty four counties by sums of less than a million.

"In the nine counties having credit balances at the present time, these sums range from $67,000 to $414,000, except in Hennepin and Ramsey counties. In five of these nine counties the credit balances will be wiped out this year, and will soon be wiped out in all the rural counties. The excess of expenditures over receipts is made up partly from the receipts in the large cities and partly from federal aid.

"In addition to the benefits the rural counties receive from trunk highway improvements, they receive an equal benefit from the fact that the trunk highway plan left the state aid, county and town road funds intact for use on the secondary roads. We have made relatively greater progress in our feeder roads in the last ten years than we have in our trunk highways. Minnesota now has more miles of graveled feeder roads than any state except two, and most of them have been built in the last ten years."

"Know What Your Cows Are Doing"

When you begin to make a careful study of what your cows are doing; according to the production of each individual cow, and what each one eats, you are on the right road to successful dairying.

Give each cow a name or number, keep a record of what she eats, and how much she gives. If you don't care to join a testing association or are out of the territory of one, bring your milk in to your buttermaker to have it tested. He will be glad to do it for you and give you advice about feeding your cows.

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Leas left Friday for Mentor to spend Easter vacation with home folks.

Miss Gerinda Monson came Saturday from Crookston to spend Easter vacation with home folks.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Sagstuen and children were callers in Holt Tuesday evening.

A number of friends and relatives were entertained at the Ludvig Monson home Sunday evening, the occasion being Miss Helen Monson's birthday.

Miss Clara Nelson visited with relatives in Holt the first of the week.

Auto Mishap

The Severson boys had a close call in being brutally run down on the open highway while returning home from Thief River Saturday evening. Some young ladies from Middle River were coming up behind them at a rate of speed that makes your speedometer sick to the stomach and, without any regard for the big red tail-light on the huge Buick, they rammed it in the rear like nobody's business.

After putting up an argument about as strong as (near beer) the ladies agreed to pay for the damages done to the Buick and proceeded to their home town to take off the spare tire on their bus and back a new car up to it.

Leonard Swan Moves

Leonard Swan and family who have been making their home on the M. B. Ordahl farm in stump lake, have now moved into the house vacated by the Con Dahl family on the V. E. Oakey farm.

Mr. Swan will have charge of the farm work there for a year.

N. S. A. Commencement

Students from fifteen Northwestern Minnesota counties, two states and Canada, returned to their respective homes following the Commencement week activities held at the Northwest School of Agriculture last week. Dr. J. W. Holland, St. Paul, delivered the Commencement address before the largest crowd that ever attended a Northwest School Commencement program. The University of Minnesota was represented by Honorable O. J. Hagen, Moorhead, newly elected member of the University Board of Regents.

The year just closed marks 25 years of steady growth and development, with the number of graduates steadily increasing from eight in 1909 to 113 in the class of 1931. Over 80 per cent of the one thousand graduates have returned to the farm as farmers and home makers, and are rapidly assuming positions of leadership in their respective communities.

Fred Peterson and family who have rented the Chas. Heinze farm the past two years, have now rented the old R. Reierson farm southeast of town and have this week moved on there.

Knute Rockne Killed

Another man who had climbed the ladder of fame, passed on to the great beyond on Tuesday, when Knute Rockne, the great football coach of Notre Dame university, was killed in an aeroplane crash in Kansas. Mr. Rockne, in company with seven others, met their death while on their way to the west coast, in a big transport plane, when one of the wings broke off, causing the plane to hurtle to the ground. The six passengers and two pilots were killed instantly.

Become Village Residents

Mr. and Mrs. Gust Peterson, pioneers of this community who have resided on their farm east of town have now retired from that work and moved to town.

Recently they purchased the small one acre farm here owned by J. O. Johnson and moved in uhere this week.

The News joins their many friends here in bidding them welcome to our village.

Finds Boat Motor

Elmer Nohre reports finding a big new boat motor in the woods near the Frank Coppay farm recently while looking for some livestock. It is believed that a party of Indians had hid it there after stealing somewhere down the line.

New Settlers

Mr. and Mrs. F. Frederickson and family arrived here by car Sunday from Ismay, Montana. They have rented the C. Heinze farm on a long time contract and will live there while they improve the land which they had purchased some time ago from the Brita Johnson estate.

Their car of househhold goods, machinery and horses arrived on Wednesday and they are now getting settled.

The News joins with the community in bidding the Frederickson family welcome here.

Forty Men Train For Road Patrol

Forty men, selected from more than 1,400 applicants, started training last week to qualify themselves for appointment to the Minnesota Highway patrol. Thirty-five new men will be added to the patrol under the terms of a bill passed recently by the Legislature.

Earle Brown, chief of the patrol, is giving the use of two buildings on his farm near Robbinsdale for training quarters. The men serve without pay during the training period, but meals are furnished by the state. The training course will last about ten weeks.

The training starts with two weeks of hard physical labor, to test the men's endurance. This is followed by instruction in traffic rules, first aid, auto mechanics, headlight testing, geography of Minnesota, English grammar and courtesy. The physical training will include boxing, wrestling, jiu-jitsu, target practice and operation of motorcycles.

When the new men are ready for the road, late in May, Minnesota will have seventy traffic officers on the state highways. The aim of the patrol is "To keep traffic moving safely." Arrests will be made only for violations of the law which seriously endanger traffic.

Persons guilty of minor infractions of the traffic act will be warned and instructed in the rules of driving.

DON'T let a Cold Settle in your Bowels!

Keep your bowels open during a cold. Only a doctor knows the importance of this. Trust a doctor to know best how it can be done.

That's why Syrup Pepsin is such a marvelous help during colds. It is the prescription of a family doctor who specialized in bowel troubles. The discomfort of colds is always lessened when it is used; your system is kept free from phlegm, mucus and acid wastes. The cold is "broken-up" more easily.

Whenever the bowels need help, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is sure to do the work. It does not gripe or sicken; but its action is thorough. It carries off all the souring waste and poison; helps your bowels to help themselves.

Take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative as soon as a cold starts, or the next time coated tongue, bad breath, or a bilious, headachy, gassy condition warns of constipation. Give it to the children during colds or whenever they're feverish, cross or upset. Nothing in it to hurt anyone; it contains only laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other mild ingredients. The way it tastes and the way it acts have made it the fastest selling laxative the drugstore carries!

When William May Garland returned to Los Angeles after his remarkable accomplishments in completing arrangements for the 1932 Olympic games in Los Angeles, he was, of course, the guest of honor at many public and private gatherings.

At one of these a friend asked him how he had enjoyed the trip. "I remember," he said, "that you were highly pleased with the prospect of going."

"True," replied Mr. Garland with a quizzical smile, "but there is one thing I have learned about traveling and that is, that most of the time it is quite a relief to get back to where you were so glad to get away from."

CHAPTER XIII

—28—

When "Influence" Failed

Mrs. Krassin rose next morning her usual self, presiding with no explanation as to her recent absence, over the Russian breakfast of coffee and bread and butter—which as yet in the Krassin household did not lack the old multiplicity of tasty appetizers distributed about the table.

She now felt a lofty sense of victory in that her prayers, her schemes, her vigils and her labors had provided for Ilya's liberation; and already her eyes were shut as to the price which she felt had been paid. That was something which must be buried in oblivion among those darker things which she accepted as a part of the life of every family and every person.

There was the necessity for the mental denial that anything had ever or would ever happen—that was all. She knew of Musia's movements, and of her appearance when she had returned. She would not allow herself to recognize the propriety of feeling sorry.

She looked over the silver and crystal service still preserved to them, with her old interest, and directed the movements of the servants with her usual calm authority. God was in his Heaven; all was well with the world; Ilya was safe!

Musia had not expected to see her mother at breakfast, and paused when she saw her as if to return to her room, so averse was she to her society; but an impulse impelled her to enter and take her usual seat, which she did with a cool nod to her mother instead of the usual kiss on the cheek.

She would show that she could still innocently look anyone in the face, she thought. She did not suspect that her mother knew of her movements last evening; and she was incapable of realizing the thoughts in Mrs. Krassin's mind in any case, since she could not conceive that her mother could believe what was in the older woman's mind.

Mrs. Krassin was talkative, in the manner of one who keeps up a rapid conversation to gloss over some unpleasant occurrence. In comparison with her recent grief and gloom, she was in good spirits. She looked her pleasantest, but Musia noticed how white her hair was becoming. The subjects upon which they could converse were curiously limited. Musia did not speak unless speech were imperatively called for, and the lead in conversation fell to her mother; and Mrs. Krassin could not speak of Ilya, since that approached a matter upon which she and Musia could not with propriety engage in conversation.

"How queer she is!" thought Musia.

She had at times felt a strong dislike and almost an enmity toward her mother; but this was the most disrespectful expression which she had ever permitted to enter her thoughts concerning her; for Musia, too, was a creature of the conventions of her circle.

But, curiously enough, she gave to her mother very little attention or thought. Her mind kept recurring to Loris; whom every moment she told herself she desired of all persons most to forget.

Forgetting seemed simple, at first, if it were not for Ilya. It was like tearing from a book a page filled with low, disgusting, dishonorable things; but her mind kept returning to matters connected with Loris, with which Ilya's deliverance had nothing to do, in spite of her mother's constant stream of talk.

She heard over and over every word he had said to her, saw every gesture, felt every touch—and the blood rushed to her cheeks.

Mrs. Krassin, who was watching her every change of expression, saw the blush and looked away. She did not know that the cause of the blush was Musia's inward embarrassment by the fact that even in the humiliation to which she had been subjected she found a certain pleasure.

She liked to remember the pressure of Loris' arm about her waist, the vibrant tones of his voice as he pleaded for her love, the touch of his lips to hers, the fact that he had mastered her. The little Princess Khaborovskaya came in, bubbling over with news, before their late breakfast was over, and Musia, not caring to listen to her, excused herself and went out of the room.

"My dear cousin," the princess exclaimed as soon as Musia had gone, "the Bolsheviki have finally gone beyond their limit—even their limit. I am sure this will bring them to the end of their rope."

"What is the new trouble?" asked Mrs. Krassin politely. "I thought they had committed every imaginable atrocity long ago. Is there anything new?"

"Well," said the princess, "I could not, of course, mention this before Musia; but in the province of Saratov they have proclaimed the nationalization of women!"

"What can you mean!" ejaculated Mrs. Krassin.

"My dear," half whispered the little cousin, with a glance at the door, "I couldn't tell it before Musia, but in that province they have done what I have said—proclaimed the nationalization of women. Any woman in the street or anywhere else to whom a Bolshevik takes a fancy, he may take. It makes no difference whether she is married or not—he may take her; and of course there is no such thing as marriage. Isn't it dreadful?"

"I think it is a canard," said Mrs. Krassin.

"No, no!" persisted the princess, contending for the truth of this rumor which was so widely circulated, not only over Russia but all over the world. "This decree is actually in effect in Saratov."

Mrs. Krassin did not wish to believe it. She was in the mental position of one who controls valuable holdings in mines, lands, machinery or other things precious, when the news of possible confiscation is bruited abroad. The princess could not understand why her cousin had suddenly become incredulous as to any rumor attributing new enormities to the Bolsheviki, and tactfully changed the subject.

"And let me ask about poor Ilya," said she. "Have you received any news since I last saw you?"

"Not for two days," replied Mrs. Krassin; "but I hope he will soon be out of prison."

"Oh! How happy you make me!" exclaimed the princess.

"I have my reasons," continued Mrs. Krassin cryptically, "for expecting his early release."

Now that the Krassin house was so far as possible itself again after the days of Mrs. Krassin's seclusion, her friends were coming and going at all times of the day. The little princess stayed a long time, discussing with visitors the fate of Ilya, which was the great question in all minds, and was now more interesting than ever. Musia passed most of her time in her own room. To her Ilya's fate had passed beyond control. It was in Loris' hands.

But what about herself? She had fully decided that it was not possible for her to continue living with her mother. If things were only as they used to be, she said to herself, she would, without a word to her mother, go to some friend or relative in Moscow or Petrograd for refuge; but as things were now such a journey was to her mind out of the question. What could she do? She wished she were a man—how freely would she venture her life for her country, and the old order of things which seemed the only safe and proper thing for her country. She would fight the Bolsheviki: and she resolved in her mind the irony of fate which offered her no refuge save with that strange, handsome, extraordinary, and—she always added—repulsive enemy of her class, Loris the commissar. Musia knew little of what transpired from day to day in her mother's reception room.

There was a change in the atmosphere in Kazan one morning, a change felt by the ragged waifs sleeping in the parks, a change which brought more jewels to the auction for exchange for clothing and fuel. The golden leaves were gone from the trees, now, and a north wind prophesied of winter—with plague and typhus.

There was a new atmosphere, too, in Mrs. Krassin's reception room, an ominous change felt by every one but the hostess herself. She was calm and more cheerful than she had been since Ilya's imprisonment. When Colonel Boyarsky came in she greeted him cordially, but did not as had been her custom, ask him for news of Ilya, though he had been her chief intelligence officer in the past.

Now she led in the making of forecasts, and they were all optimistic. She repeated to the colonel what she had only a day or so before told her cousin the princess: that she had every reason for believing that Ilya, by reason of influence exerted in his favor in quarters which she could not disclose, would very soon be liberated. It was only a matter of a very brief time, she felt sure. It might be today, even.

Revocation of Rights Forced Out Huguenots

The Huguenots were the Puritans of France in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries. The name was first used about 1560; its origin is unknown. The Huguenots suffered severely in the reign of Francis I and his immediate successors, and after 1562 were frequently involved in war, under the leadership of such men as Admiral Coligny and King Henry of Navarre, afterward Henry IV of France. Coligny and from 20,000 to 30,000 others fell in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, August 24, 1572. In spite of all this, they continued numerous and powerful and the Edict of Nantes, issued in 1593 by Henry IV, gave them full political and civil rights. Their power was broken after the surrender of La Rochelle and the revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV, in 1685, and hundreds of thousands of Huguenots went into exile, going to Prussia, Holland, Switzerland, England, Scotland and the New world.

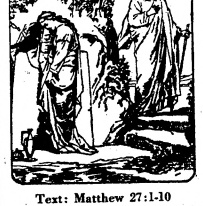
RESURRECTION



Text: Matthew 27:1-10

In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre.

And, behold, there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

He is not here; for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: Lo, I have told you.

And they departed quickly from the sepulchre, with fear and great joy, and did run to bring his disciples word.

And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshiped him.

Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren, that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

Festival of Easter Unchanged by Time

The continuance, the rise and fall of festivals is one of the mysteries of the human race. Once upon a time Twelfth night was the jolliest of feasts, merry with wassail parties, and everybody had a cake, a cake with a bean in it. Frazer gives many of the curious Whitsunday customs, some of which still survive in Europe, though in this country they have virtually disappeared. And where are the goose, the "apple sauce, onions and sage" which once graced the board at the feast of Michaelmas?

Only the egg habit of Easter has grown with the years, and the modern child expects a clutch of eggs with the same confidence as presents at Christmas. In the early days the chocolate eggs, the toy eggs, the pasteboard ovals with their varied "gifts" were unknown. Eggs there were, but they were only the simple product of the hen, which fond mothers wrapped in pieces of red flannel to give them a wonderful scarlet color. In the first days of Christianity dyed Easter eggs were blessed by the priests and kept as amulets, as mascots. But historians tell us that they find references to the eggs of spring long before the Christian religion came into being, and that the rolling of the Pesche, or Pace, egg is one of the oldest customs in the world. Perhaps the fact that children the world over long ago adopted "egg rolling" as their own especial delight will suffice to keep the Easter egg customs always in fashion.

Gay Easter Feathers

During later years the custom of donning new clothes on Easter Sunday has become such a fixed and universal one that non-observance is considered not only to be a sign of eccentricity, but also a forerunner of bad luck.

REJOICE!

Let all the jubilant sounds of earth swing up in one resonant wave of triumphant song. Let us robe ourselves in the sunny gladness of a hope so bright—the hope that defies death, and reaches across all the breadth of graves, and clasps the hand of an immortal friend, and says through any hour of sorrow, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him"—waking or sleeping, for, waking or sleeping, we are the Lord's; and while it thus chants its faith, hears, rising slow and sweet, and with an olden pathos, out of the deeps of ancient days, the quenchless faith of a twilight child of God: "I know that my Redeemer liveth: . . . and though after my mortal death worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Rev. I. M. Haldemann, in Farm and Ranch.

LIVE STOCK

TURNING CATTLE ON GRASS RISKY

Better Plan to Sell Animals Directly From Feed Lot.

It is better to sell directly from the feed lot cattle that have been heavily corn-fed during the winter and spring than to turn them on pasture. Tests at the Ohio experiment station and elsewhere show that such cattle turned on grass lost heavily during the first few weeks and even later fail to make large gains.

For this reason, G. Bohstedt, head of the animal industry department at the Ohio station, holds that the turning of corn-fed cattle on grass in the spring is financially a risky practice, especially with poorly bred cattle. A feeding trial under his direction last year showed that corn-fed cattle would much better have been sold directly out of the feed lot than later after having been turned on pasture.

Sometimes cattle feeders are tempted to change their original plan of shipping directly from the feed lot. Perhaps heavier cattle command a premium; or, if young stuff is being fed, it may not be finished enough to suit the present market.

Cattle need roughage even for finishing, which cannot be done on corn and cottonseed meal alone. The supply of hay, silage, or shock corn may be low. But it is a mistake to turn the heavily corn-fed cattle on pasture, although the grass is abundant and cheap and palatable to the cattle.

It may be possible to spread the hay or silage a little farther. The steers may relish some bright oat straw. Grinding or crushing the ear corn to corn-and-cob meal will help provide roughage. A little bran and oats in the ration is splendid under such conditions. At the same time a liberal amount of cottonseed meal should be fed, especially now that it is cheap. Yearlings and older cattle will do well getting about three pounds daily per head. More has been fed at times with profit.

These or other alternatives may make it necessary to turn corn-fed cattle on new grass, and both practical experience and experimental evidence argue for selling directly out of the feed lot.

Use Formalin Solution to Cure Cattle Bloat

Bloating in cattle, when reached in time, can often be relieved by drenching the animal with a solution of half an ounce of formalin in a quart of water. After the animal has recovered a second drench composed of a pound of epsom salts and half an ounce of ginger in a pint of tepid water should be administered. This treatment is being used with marked success in the Kentucky experiment station's herd.

When, in the spring, cattle are first turned on clover or other green feed, the change should be gradual. This is best accomplished by having the cattle graze for 20 to 30 minutes the first day on pasture, and increase this period each day until the digestive organs become accustomed to the green, succulent feed.

During the early weeks of spring, cattle should not remain in the pasture overnight nor be turned on pasture while dew or frost is on the grass. An excellent practice is to feed cattle a little hay or other dry feed before turning them on pasture. Watchfulness during a week or two of early spring will prevent many cases of bloat.

The roasts from the two-year-old and yearling steers are more palatable than the roasts from the calves.

Rapidity of gains is important. So is market topping ability. But neither of these two items is a safe guide to profitableness in cattle feeding.

A good substitute for any of the cereal crops on farms raising live stock is alfalfa, grown either alone for hay or in a mixture with grasses for pasture.

* * *

An idle horse will do very well during the winter period on a good quality of straw if given about ten pounds of clover or alfalfa hay a day in addition. Soy bean hay or sweet clover hay, if well cured, will also furnish the needed protein.

Need More Protein

When hens are not laying, there are a few questions to ask relative to the flock. First, are they properly housed? Second, are the pullets matured and up to standard weight? Third, are parasites, either external or internal, handicapping the flock? If these three questions can be answered satisfactorily and still the birds are not laying in a suitable manner, then it is likely that the trouble lies in the ration. Well-grown birds need a ration containing more protein.

Kills His Brother And Hides Body

Boy Confesses to Ghastly Murder Following Quarrel Over Car.

Stevens Point, Wis.—The murder of his brother, in cold blood, was confessed here recently by Anton Riske, seventeen, after a neighbor's boy on the way to school found pools of frozen blood on the road, mingled with bits of brain tissue which proved upon examination to be human. The body of the slain youth was recovered later from the Wisconsin river.

Riske said that he and his brother John, twenty-five, who lived with their widowed mother, Mrs. Mary Riske, on a farm in the town of Carsons, had been having trouble over use of John's car and that he determined to kill John.

"When we went out in the car," he told District Atorney John Meleski and Sheriff John Kubisiak, "I took my shotgun along and sat in the back seat. I said I would use it to scare some dogs that always ran out at us. I loaded the gun while John drove and when we got by a big stubble field I aimed at the back of his head and pulled the trigger.

Put Body Through Ice.

"John didn't move, but the car ran into the ditch and stopped. I could see some lights coming and I was afraid somebody would see that he was dead, so I dragged him around back of the car and fastened him by the leg to the bumper with a tire chain. Then I drove away back in the stubble field and turned out my lights."

Anton said that he unfastened the chain in the field and loaded the body into the back seat of the car. Then, when the approaching car had passed, he drove out of the field and over to highway 10, from which a small side road took him to a river landing. He drove a mile up the river on the ice to a spot where he knew a hole was kept open to water teams.

With a pole kept there for the purpose, he broke the thin ice on the water hole and pushed his brother's body head first into the river. He pointed out the place and at the first lunge with a long pike pole a deputy sheriff brought up the body. John Riske had been shot in the right temple.

Anton went home and wiped out the car with rags. He hid the bloody rags, including his handkerchief, under the hay in the barn, with one of John's oxfords which had come off in the car. He put his brother bloodstained overshoes in the house.

Then the slayer wrote a note and signed his brother's name, saying that John had gone away with another fellow and would never return. He addressed it to his mother and she found it the next day.

When Joseph Olszewski, seven, ran home to his father and said that somebody had been killed on the road, Adam Olszewski put him off with the remark that a dog probably had been hit. The boy, however, was so excited and so insistent that the father finally went with him to the spot. He trailed the bloody circle through the field and remembered that he had seen the lights of a car there the night before.

Olszewski picked up pieces of brain tissue and brought them here to Dr. Carl Von Neupert, county physician, who said at once that they were human tissue.

Discover Bloodstains.

The discovery led to rumors that Mrs. Riske had been killed. Only two farms are on that road, the Riske and the Olszewski places. Officers went to the Riske home and found Mrs. Riske there. She said that everybody was all right on her farm except that John had gone away.

Anton was taken from a wood-cutting job and questioned. He said that he had taken John over to a neighbor's place but the officers found that this neighbor had left for northern Wisconsin the day before. Then Anton said that John had gone to a dance with the car and must have got into a fight because the car was bloody.

County authorities were thoroughly suspicious of Anton by this time and they went to the Riske farm again for a thorough search. This time they discovered blood at the pump and the things hidden in the barn. The seats of John's car were found to have been saturated with blood.

When Anton was confronted with this evidence, he confessed.

Paris.—While the rulers of Monaco are squabbling as to how to use the gambling spoils, Mussolini has been planning to become dictator of the green tables, according to reports.

It is said that he plans to create an "independent gambling state" of San Remo to rival Monte Carlo.

Creation of this new country would enable San Remo to devise gaming laws of her own, introduce every known kind of game of chance, attract big finance, and, last but not least, probably bring to the new casinos the famed Greek banking concession, which went on a strike more than six months ago against the French government's new taxes on the baccarat bank.

There have been rumors for a long time of an Italian attempt to cut in on the French Riviera's profits by creating a new world of entertainment on the Mediterranean. It is said that the authorities on the other side of the border now consider the time ripe to make war on Monte Carlo and that the independent state of San Remo will result.

Dentist Pulls Own Teeth and Then Fits Bridge

Omaho.—Dr. H. E. Newton, Omaha dentist, recently pulled two of his own front teeth. After the gums healed Doctor Newton made a bridge for the cavities.

The doctor, however, didn't pull the teeth as an advertising stunt.

The rest of the world probably would never have known that the doctor did his own dental work if it hadn't been for L. C. Chapman, insurance man, who held the mirror while the doctor performed the operation.

Used for the first time in architecture, the so-called cobweb dome is being constructed for the Travel and Transportation building of the Chicago Century of Progress exposition.

SIGNS OF DECAY SHOWING IN WASHINGTON MONUMENT

Engineers and Architects Worried Over Condition of Building Stone.

New York.—The marble of which the Washington monument is constructed is showing rather alarming signs of decay, to the worriment of engineers and architects.

There is, of course, no danger to the monument yet, writes D. W. Kessler, bureau of standards engineer, in the American Architect, but the fact that the marble is cracking and chipping—architects call it spalling—gives one to think about the material of which structures designed for the centuries should be built.

The old story of frost breaking up the stone is not taken too seriously by Mr. Kessler, although that may have something to do with it. He looks upon the spalling marble as simply decaying and proposes no remedies.

Among other things, the unnatural gases and acids which modern cities pour into their air are seen as an important factor in the decomposition of building stone.

There are not enough old buildings in this country for the various kinds of native stones to have been thoroughly tested. The bureau of standards issues reports on building stones as the results of tests under simulated weather conditions but there arises the question of whether these tests really approximate the effect of weathering on building stone.

The tremendous load strain on the stone of the Washington monument may have some part in the spalling of the edges of the stones.

"Many writers on the subject of masonry decay have been inclined to place most of the blame on frost action," writes Mr. Kessler in the American Architect, but he adds, "Since this does not occur to slate we must conclude that such dense materials are not stressed appreciably by frost."

Stranger Gives Blood to Save Homeless Waif

Chattanooga, Tenn.—A sixteen-year-old homeless orphan, Edgar Chapman, lives today because of the gift of a pint of a stranger's blood.

It came in answer to a radio appeal after physicians decided a blood transfusion alone could save his life from the effects of a difficult operation.

Hundreds answered, men and women, old and young, scores were tested and finally the blood of E. D. Milligan, twenty-year-old resident of Chicago, was found satisfactory.

Enrollment Gains

Washington.—Enrollment in industrial and vocational schools receiving federal aid was 10 per cent higher in 1930 than in 1929, figures of the federal board for vocational education reveal. The 1930 enrollment was over 600,000.

This Woman In 4 Weeks Lost 17 Pounds of Fat

Here's a letter written October 21, 1929, by Mrs. Fred Barringer of Lewistown, Montana, that ought to be read by every overweight woman in America.

Gentlemen: I started taking Kruschen every morning as directed as I was very much overweight and wanted to reduce.

I had tried going on a diet but would get so hungry that my diet would not last long, so I decided to give "Kruschen Salts" a fair trial. The day I started to take them I weighed 256 lbs. and at present, which has been just four weeks, I weigh 239 lbs. And I must say, I feel better in every way, besides looking much better.

May all large people, both men and women, who want to reduce in an easy way, give Kruschen Salts a fair trial. I am sure it will convince anyone.

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts four weeks costs but 85c at any drugstore in America. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning. To help reduce swiftly cut out pastry and fatty meats and go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar.

The Kruschen way is the safe way to reduce—Try one bottle and if not joyfully satisfied—money back.—Adv.

Treasure Hunters Keep Up Search for Wealth

Coronado led the most amazing expeditions ever made on the North American continent, the quest for the Seven Cities of Cibola, the inhabitants of which lived in palaces ornamented with sapphires and turquoises, and possessed gold without end. With that amazing quest the history and the traditions of the Southwest began. They began with a seeker for treasure, and almost constantly since his day to the present time other seekers have been going on similar quests in the Southwest.

In the San Saba country at the present moment treasure searches are in progress; down in the Big Bend region today men are looking for the Lost Nigger mine; out in Jeff Davis county old Bill Cole is digging for "the Monterrey holdup stuff" by El Muerto springs; in the Techolote mountains overlooking the Pecos river, just below the village of Pecos, N. M., Jose Vaca is still tunneling away, "with an unflagging abandonment that only genius can realize," for the mythical "treasure of Montezuma"; and in literally scores of other remote corners of this southwestern country dream-driven seekers are digging, digging, digging for hidden wealth that always barely eludes their grasp.

Moreover, hundreds of others, men of all walks of life, will, at the smallest provocation, give circumstantial accounts of hidden gold, detailing the particulars of its location. Literally dozens of them can produce maps and "way bills" to guide the seeker. They have absolute faith in the existence of such treasure and "some day" they are going to set out in quest of it. All these, and the like of them who have followed the same dream in this southwestern country during a hundred years or more, are traditional descendants of the conquistador who first blazed a trail across its trackless prairies and into its mountain regions.—Texas Weekly.

World Threatend With Shortage of Monkeys

It is some time since Dr. Serge Vorono startled the world by his announcement that he could make the old young again by his process of grafting monkey glands.

It is in the regions of Africa lying near the equator that monkeys of the right sort are chiefly found. But during the last few years hunters have killed and captured such quantities of them that they are now becoming more and more difficult to obtain. Many adventurers who go out in the hope of making a fortune by supplying monkeys make use of wrong methods, with the result that thousands are destroyed senselessly and uselessly.

It is hoped that in the near future regulations will be made which will save the monkeys from extinction. Meantime, large tracts of forest are being fenced off as monkey preserves, and all hunting is forbidden within their boundaries.—London Tit-Bits.

Experts Disclose Woes That Lead to Insanity

The dominant causes of many mental disorders are unhappy domestic relations and unemployment and its attendant financial worries, according to a survey presented to the Association for Research in Nervous and Mental Diseases at its meetings held recently in New York.

The survey shows that of 100 cases studied, mental illness was caused in twenty-five instances by friction in family life and in fifteen cases by unemployment and loss of savings. Other causes included: death of relatives, nine; anxiety over health of family, sixteen, and emotional stress of an unnamed type, seven. Dr. A. C. Bonner, leader in the discussions, said that women were more susceptible than men.—New York Evening Post.

STOMACH WEAK—LIVER SLUGGISH

Beloit, Wis.—"The best tonic and blood medicine I have ever taken is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I always take it in the springtime to clear up my system and enrich my blood. And I was suffering from weak stomach, sluggish liver and sick headaches, I took the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and it corrected this trouble and I have never suffered since with any of these ailments. If one has any impurities in the system the 'Golden Medical Discovery' will drive them out."—Mrs. Geo. Basford, 115 Moore St.

For TEETHING troubles

Fussy, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Duck Season Cut

Federal law has shortened the Minnesota duck hunting season by fifteen days and imposed other regulations on the hunting of game birds the United States department of Agriculture has announced.

Hereafter the season will open October 1st instead of September 16, and shooting on the opening day of the season will begin at noon instead of at sunrise, according to the new restrictions.

President Hoover approved the regulations recommended by the biological survey of the department of agriculture. The changes are incorporated in the migratory bird regulations.

Bills are before the Minnesota state legislature providing for changes in the state regulations to conform with the federal regulations. The new regulations apply to ducks and geese, including brant, coots and jacksnipes.

The season will close fifteen days earlier in all the southern winter grounds.

A motion was made and carried that Harry Engen be given a season's dance permit for the holding of Public Dances in the Engen Garage. Said permit to be issued under the conditions that all dances are to be policed by the Sheriff of Marshall County, Engen to pay all expense in connection with the fees charged by the Sheriff.

A motion was made and carried that the resolution requested by the State Highway Dept. in connection with the approving of alignment, grade, etc., covering the construction of Trunk Highway No. 32, be tabled. Clerk was instructed to write the Highway engineer with reference to grades to be made within the village.

Letter from W. O. Braggans, County Atty., relative to the unpaid taxes within the village, was read to the council. The Village Clerk was instructed to write Mr. Braggans and advise him as to the description of all property on which taxes have not been paid.

Sam Lorentson offered the following resolution and moved that the same be adopted:

BE IT RESOLVED, that all parties wishing to do any draying, hauling of rubbish or any other hauling for which a fee is charged, be required to furnish a permit from the Village Council. Said permit to be issued by the village clerk and the fee shall be $5.00 per year. This resolution to be in full force and effect as soon as the same has received a majority number of votes by the members of the village council. Upon being put to a vote, the members voted as follows:

Ayes: Sandberg, Ness, Lorentson, Peterson, and Fricker.
Nays: None. Resolution carried.

There being no further business, a motion was made and carried to adjourn.

GEO. FRICKER, Clerk.

Prosperity and the Corner

You have heard from time to time that prosperity is hanging around the corner. So was it with spring, but since that has actually made its official appearance around this highly spoken of corner, prosperity should have a better chance to show up and, we hope it does before some optimist tells us that is yet way back around the bend and has not yet reached the old corner.

4-H Club To Meet

The 4-H Club will meet at the High School Auditorium Tuesday evening, April 14th, at eight o'clock. It is very important that all members be present as they will receive information.

Andrew Bjerk arrived here last week to make his home for the summer, after having spent the winter at the home of his daughter in Grand Forks.

Get Rid of the Boarders . . .

You will be surprised to learn after you have made careful records of your cows, that some of them are not even paying for their feed.

Lots of times this was the cow you had picked for the winner and you don't like to give her up. But how long would you keep a hired man that wouldn't work? Get rid of your Boarder Cows. Better to give them away than to dig into your profits to keep them well fed and looking nice.

Allotment Made

Marshall county was granted $19,130 from the one-mill state aid fund, for use on its state aid roads, and $70,620 from the counties' one third of the gas tax, for use on county aid roads, at meeting of the State Highway allotment board last week. Total allotments of state aid were $1,913,000, while the total gas fund was estimated at $3,200,000. The allotment board consists of State Auditor Stafford King, State Treasurer Julius Schmahl, and C.M. Babcock, commissioner of Highways.

Allotments from the state aid fund are based largely upon the assessed valuation in each county but, subject to the one per cent minimum and three per cent maximum fixed by law. Special allotments, however, are made in few cases, to take care of unusual needs. These are made only upon request, in the form of a resolution by the county board. The allotment board considered requests for special allotments totaling $241,400, of which $74,693 were granted.

Allotment of the gas tax or county aid fund is based upon traffic needs, road mileage and area of the counties, subject to a minimum of ½ per cent and a maximum of 3 per cent fixed by law. Special allotments may also be made from this fund, upon request of the county board. Requests for special allotments from this fund totaled $325,082, of which $134,390 were granted. In case of both the state aid and gas tax fund the board was unable to grant all the special requests without unduly depleting the regular allotments. Regular allotments from the state aid fund totaled $1,838,307 and from the gas tax fund $3,065,610.

The sums alloted from the gas tax fund are paid to the counties in two installments, one half in August and one half in February. This money is expended by the county boards, in cooperation with the town boards, and the work is not subject to the state supervision. The money allotted from the state aid fund is also expended by the county boards, the money being paid to the counties from time to time as work is completed and approved by the State Highway department.

Aged War Veterans

Daniel C. Dakeman was the last pensioner of the Revolutionary war. He died 86 years after the close of the war at the age of one hundred and nine years, eight months and eight days on April 5, 1869. Hiram Cronk was the last surviving pensioner of the War of 1812. He died on May 13, 1905, at the age of one hundred and five years and sixteen days. Owen Thomas Edgar, last surviving pensioner of the Mexican war, died in Washington, September 3, 1929.

Narrow Thoroughfare

The narrowest street in the United States is said to be Treasury street in St. Augustine, Fla. It is 6 feet 1 inch wide. This street was shown as a street on the map of St. Augustine in 1737, and called Treasury street because the old treasury was on the corner of this cross street and St. George street. Carriages used to drive through it, and a stone was placed at the entrance on Bay street to prevent this. The old treasury building is still standing.

Not Much Difference

The words fort and fortress are often used interchangeably. In the United States all permanently garrisoned places, whether fortified or not, are termed forts. In fortification fort is usually applied to a work entirely inclosed by defensible parapets. Fortress generally designates a fortified city or town, or any piece of ground so strongly fortified as to be capable of resisting an attack. It is a permanent fortification.

Famous American's Nickname

"Old Man Eloquent" was one of the nicknames of John Quincy Adams during the latter years of his life while he was a member of the house of representatives. Milton applied the phrase to Isocrates, the famous Greek orator, who is said to have died of mental shock and grief when he learned that Philip of Macedon had defeated the Greek allies at Chaeronea.—Pathfinder Magazine.

George Rogers Clark is buried in Cave Hill cemetery in Louisville, Ky. General Clark founded the city of Louisville in 1779 after returning from his military expedition to the Northwest. He spent most of his declining year in Louisville, Ky., and Clarksville, Ind., across the Ohio river from Louisville. This town was also founded by General Clark.

Had Enough of the Sea

On account of a shipwreck in his teens when he was emigrating from England to South Africa, Mr. Clark of Boshof, Orange Free State, made his way inland, and vowed that he would never cast eyes on the sea again. He settled at Boshof, where he built up an extensive general dealers' business, and left a large fortune at his death.

The colonel was downcast and gloomy. He made several attempts to say something to Mrs. Krassin, but as if in self-defense, she interrupted and led the conversation off on lines more cheerful than she hoped to hear from one looking so depressed. Her son was innocent. Not even the Bolsheviki would do such a thing as to punish him—and even the Bolsheviki were susceptible to influence. The colonel whispered to the princess, who grew pale as she looked at her infatuated cousin.

"I have received certain information about Ilya," said he at last in a voice which should have warned Mrs. Krassin. "The Bolsheviki look upon his case very seriously. I am afraid the end is not certain to be as favorable as you seem to think."

A hush settled over the company; the princess knew; the rest understood.

"He may be sentenced," the colonel went on, "to a severe punishment; to many years in prison."

"I do not think so," said Mrs. Krassin, with her most superior smile. "I may confide in you that I have the best of reasons for thinking that this Commissar Loris is not so bloodthirsty as we have been accustomed to believe, and that he is interesting himself in Ilya's case. If so, and I do not think I misjudge the situation, that would seem the decisive factor."

There was deep pity in the colonel's face as he gazed upon her during this speech; and when she had ended he looked about at the others as if for aid in discharging his unpleasant task.

"I am sorry to have to say," said he at last, "that his intervention, even if he is acting as you believe, is not certain to be successful. The sailors have charge of the prisoners, and they are ravening beasts!"

Mrs. Krassin's hand went to her heart and she turned deadly pale; but she persisted.

"I am positive," said she, "that all will come out right."

"I am positive," said the colonel with immense gravity, "that Ilya is sentenced to death."

Mrs. Krassin started to her feet; the purple mounted up from under her jabot and formed deep spots in her cheeks; her hand performed its old gesture of perplexity; but clinging in desperation to her sole hope, she made her last protest.

"I have reasons," she half whispered through livid lips, "for believing in success."

Then as she felt the hopelessness she saw in the faces around, she uttered an exclamation of which they spoke afterward with wonder. "Where is that traitress, Musia!"

"My dear," said her old cousin, stepping to her side and putting her arm about Mrs. Krassin's waist, "the only thing for us to do is to pray to God!"

The miserable mother understood at last! All her prayers, all her schemes, all her vigils, all her bids for dishonor were in vain. Nobody who saw her then will ever forget. Her whole face grew purple and then bluish pale with a pallor like that of death. With a gesture terrible in its tragedy she lifted her hands and shrieked, "My G—d! He is dead!" Then she toppled down like a tower falling in an earthquake, and fell, drawing down the little princess with her, and lay like a corpse.

It was the princess who told Musia. It was thought best not to take the news to Judge Krassin, because any shock, they had been advised, might be fatal to him.

A great wave of forgiveness and compunction swept over Musia when she saw her mother, so tragic was her condition. Though Mrs. Krassin had recovered her senses she lay in her bed with no more expression on her face than a mask might display.

Musia stepped softly to the bed and stooped over it.

"Mammy!" she whispered.

Slowly, as if with great difficulty, Mrs. Krassin turned her eyes on her daughter and held them there for a moment as if to make sure that she had recognized her. The small reddish eyes were bloodshot and heavy, and Musia thought that her mother had not realized who it was who had spoken to her; but suddenly the face flushed and the eyes narrowed with hate.

"It's your fault!" she gasped. "You murdered him! You might have saved him! I will never forget or forgive. . . . Miserable!"

CHAPTER XIV

The Decision of the Fates

The families of the executed were not allowed to receive their bodies; but the chanting of requiems in the cathedrals in memory of the dead was permitted by the Bolshevik authorities. Musia found herself the sole representative of the Krassin family to attend these observances, for her mother was still confined to her bed. The girl listened to the lofty music, the sad hymns; she looked at the priests in their black velvet and silver robes, fixed her eyes on the little black altar of the requiem in the midst of the church with its forest of wax candles about the crucifix, looked into the eyes of the dark paintings of the saints on the walls, and felt only a dumb wonder that the lives of these innocent people for whom the world might have held happiness should have been taken, and her own wrecked life preserved, and all this in a world ruled by an all-powerful and just God.

She had gone through all this before the priests announced the requiems of "the slaves of God" Ilya and Vladimir, and even then she listened almost indifferently. Other mourners cried. Several women fainted. Though Musia felt a fleeting sensation of shame at her own impassivity in the midst of grief, she could not join in them, though she thought in a remote way that she understood the feelings from which they came.

She felt ashamed that all the time she was thinking of herself, the wreck of her life, the perils to which she was exposed in this new and savage society, her bitter griefs quite aside from the deaths of Ilya and Vladimir.

She tried to fix her mind on Ilya, and her thoughts began to dwell on her old happy days with him, the presents he used to send her, their little secrets. These things brought the tears to her eyes; these, and the thought in all the world, now, there was no one who cared for her as Ilya had done.

"I Am Positive," She Said, "That All Will Come Out Right."

She could not think of her mother, lying stricken at home instead of being here at the chanting of the requiem—the thought was too bitter. She dwelt on the memory of Vladimir, his budding love for her, her tender feelings toward him. And she found herself drawing pictures of life with Vladimir in his house in Petrograd; of the luxury of going to balls, theaters and operas with him; of their great estates; of the children growing up about them—all in safety.

That was the thing lost, safety. How desolate it made her to feel that there were no more estates, no more of that large, liberal old life, but only people gone wild and mad, who hunted the aristocrats like wild beasts. And she, Musia, was so young, and had so long to live!

She spent her time at home in a corner of her room thinking, brooding. The sound of guns came to her ears in dull distant explosions for days, before her cousin the princess told her that there was fighting about Kazan, that the wounded were carried in truck loads through the streets, and that the epidemic of typhus was growing worse every day.

"We thought the day before yesterday," said the princess, in her gossipy way, as if speaking about a party or a play, "that the Bolsheviki were going to be driven out; but Colonel Boyarsky says that the Whites have had to fall back. One can scarcely hear the firing today; but their end will come. All we have to do is to wait."

World's Iodine Supply Gathered From the Sea

The commercial supply of iodine is almost entirely obtained from seaweeds. In some of the latter—particularly the giant kelp, known to science as Macrocystis, meaning "big bulb"—the concentration of iodine is extraordinary. That marine plant, enormous in size, anchored to the sea bottom by a stem hundreds of feet long, with a vast floating frond of leaves, contains over one-fourth of 1 per cent of iodine.

Those giant seaweeds are ideal carriers of iodine for human uses. Medicinal extracts made from them are already standardized, and have proved most valuable. But the kelps, vastly abundant, should yield valuable food products. They contain all the worth-while minerals that the ocean holds in solution, and may be regarded as marine vegetables neglected through ignorance.

THAT KIND OF PERSON

By FANNIE HURST

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service.)

THE chronic restlessness which beset the soul of Agnes Lynn was largely due to the fact that she was continually being made aware, by appreciative friends, that she was too big a person for her small role.

Her role was that of primary teacher in the two-room rural schoolhouse nestled in a rather lovely valley that separated, by miles, two thriving villages.

For four years Agnes Lynn, who had been graduated from Normal school in the capital city of the state, had held this position as one of the two teachers in the little old, proverbially red, schoolhouse that stood beneath a pair of twin oaks and was backed by a beautiful rise of Pennsylvania mountains. The second teacher was a poetic-faced, middle-aged man named Roger Nash who had a bad limp due to what some people feared was a tubercular bone condition. But that was gossip.

Except for the insistence from her local friends, as well as those in one or another of the two adjoining villages, to say nothing of those in the city where she had been educated, Agnes could have found it in her heart to relax to the quiet, rural beauties of her life as school teacher in this green and placid valley. And yet she knew that she owed it to herself, her friends and her future, to put to more significant use the fine and virile brain with which she was so undoubtedly endowed.

It took all of her will power to fight against the inertia induced by the tranquil years in the tranquil valley. The children who trouped daily into her classroom were clean-faced, clean-hearted little youngsters, products of a wholesome agricultural environment, eager to be friends with her. The pleasant companionship of Roger Nash, frail, visionary, passive, was of sufficient intellectual stimulation to ward off tedium. Her room at the farmhouse where she boarded was a lovely old one of rare, early American furniture, spic-and-span cleanliness and a view of apple orchard, mountain stream and rich countryside that never ceased to delight her. As a matter of fact, an apple tree actually leaned in at her window to awaken her.

That was why, throughout the years she spent in the valley, Agnes had to fight against the sweetish kind of inertia that enveloped her. Life was so pleasant here, so deeply tranquil, each day filled with a fresh simplicity. And yet in her heart she realized how meager the sphere, how unworthy of her abilities, how spiritually and mentally lazy of her to remain. Teaching limited her talents. Throughout her college career Agnes had exhibited a talent for executive work.

Her chance came when the principal of the Normal school from which she had graduated wrote an offer to recommend her for the position of executive secretary to the vice president of a Chicago mortgage and trust company.

There was simply no withstanding the lure of this offer. It meant not only the tripling of her salary, but it offered her contacts that could lead to big achievements in the business world. There did not seem much reason for Agnes to hesitate. And what hesitating she did was too private to confide to even the best of her friends. She would not have dared to admit it.

Opportunity had rapped long and insistently at Agnes' door.

Chicago, insofar as its resemblance to the life she left in the valley was concerned, might have been a city, not in another state, but on another planet. Not even her life as a student in the capital city of her state had prepared her for the degree of intensity, the complicated arduousness that awaited her. Life was like a gale that caught her from the moment she stepped off the train and kept her swirling and twirling at high tempo.

The demands of her position also kept her keyed to a degree of intensity that was as astonishing as it was exhilarating. For the first few months of the new environment, bewildered as she was in many respects, Agnes realized that she owed it to herself to have ventured forth into these active fields of enterprise. Gone were the old fears of intellecual lassitude, mental decline and physical smugness. The city had her in its tempo.

She rose in her fairly comfortable boarding house room that had for its vista the window of another boarding house room precisely like hers, she dressed in haste, she breakfasted in haste at a cafeteria, she met her employer in the tense, terse, impersonal mood of the city, she performed her tasks with a mechanical and speeded-up rectitude, she lunched in a business women's club to the rattle of dishes and the roar of the elevated railroad, she met her employer for an afternoon of more of the speed of routine, she dined in a table d'hote tearoom with the evening paper propped up against the sugar bowl. She sought out the movies, the theater or the company of a male or female colleague in her office for her evening's entertainment.

There was a man. There naturally would be in the life of an attractive, up-and-going girl like Agnes. He was salesmanager for the Chicago branch of an enormous automobile concern. A hale, hearty fellow, with concrete ambitions, tried and true. Lilianthal was headed for wealth. He wanted power, position, money. He was on his way to obtain them. He was already slated for one of the vice presidency plums of his firm.

Strange that he should have been attracted to a girl of the particular type of Agnes. There was nothing obvious about her. She dawned upon you slowly. There was the obvious about Lilianthal. He was precisely what he seemed to be. In the phraseology of his trade he was a "comer." And yet, buried in him, was the consciousness that here in this slender, well-bred girl, was the sort of woman with whom he could proudly share his ultimate success. He visualized her in pearls and good lace, presiding at his table.

A successful man needed a wife like that. Class! That was Agnes all over—nothing showy, but class!

There came a time when the rather simple routine of the young business woman became a thing of the past. Instead, the best lakeshore hotel restaurant; night after night with Lilianthal. Opera. Races. Motor rides. And all, bear in mind, strictly within the pale of the rigid social formula of Agnes. Lilianthal, who was known to have had his fling, treated her with the kind of elaborate deference a man of his type will show toward the woman he contemplates as mate.

In fact, if Lilianthal erred at all, it was in conservatism. Agnes was to be treated as the woman worthy to become his wife.

For sixteen months Agnes succeeded in sidestepping the impending proposal of marriage. It came one night, the very week, to be exact, that the banking house which employed her services increased her salary by 33⅓ per cent and gave her a bonus of five hundred dollars.

At the conclusion of eighteen months Agnes was not only justifying the confidence of her friends in her executive ability, but was about to make a marriage that was in keeping with her general success.

It was then, while Lilianthal was waiting a promised week for his answer, that Agnes sat down and took stock.

It was the first time she had dared allow herself the time to make mental inventory of the state of mind and being of this girl who had come out of the valley.

First and foremost it was obvious to her that she was not in love—with Lilianthal.

It seemed to her as she sat there, facing herself in her boarding house room, that she was bankrupt in countless ways; that she was empty handed, empty-hearted. Everything that the new life had brought her was something mechanical and outside of herself. Good clothes. Good shows. Good restaurants. Showy companionship. And to replace the old joy-of-the-valley that seemed to have flowed out of her, there remained nothing.

Lilianthal was out of the question.

Confidant predictions to the contrary notwithstanding, Agnes was miscast. She was not that kind of person. Memory of the valley—sweet mornings of walking to school, the trouping children, the pleasant chats beneath the schoolyard oak trees with a sensitive man called Roger Nash, the simple foods, the simple pastimes, the lovely, tranquil, early American room, became a nostalgia that was almost too much to bear.

Agnes had dared to take stock of herself. The results were appalling, but had to be faced. Agnes was not the kind of person she was supposed to be.

It took courage to go back; it took more courage than she would have believed herself capable of. It is not easy in life to take what may be regarded as a retrogressive step and that is just what Agnes did in returning to her position as school teacher in the valley. At least that is how her friends, who were so ambitious for her, regarded it. She had gone backward. She had not been of the stamina they had hoped.

Agnes is not particularly interested in the psychology of it. She only knows that the valley is sweeter and greener and cleaner than ever and the task of teaching the young is one that fills her with ambition. The days have a tonic for her that nothing else could quite achieve and so have the long, stimulating hours in the company of Roger Nash, the visionary.

See-Saw

"After very patiently telling my pupils in English the various uses of 'saw' and 'seen,'" writes Mrs. Donald Gridley of Los Angeles, "I called upon one of them to give sentences using the words correctly.

"The little girl thought a few moments and then smilingly gave this answer:

"'The saw is very dull. The seen is very beautiful.'"

Handicapped

Struggling with a three-year-old appetite, she had a mouthful of potato and was reaching for her glass of milk. Some one asked her a question and her answer was: "Uh huh."

"Is that the way to answer?" her mother prompted.

"Why," she replied, gulping down her mouthful, "I didn't have anything to talk with!"

FOR COLDS—ALKALINIZE YOUR SYSTEM

Doctors everywhere are prescribing this new treatment for colds:

Begin when you feel a cold coming. Take a tablespoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, morning, noon and night, the first day. Do the same second day. Then only at night.

Colds reduce the alkalinity of your system. That's what makes you feel achy, feverish, weak, half-sick. Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is alkali in harmless, palatable form. It checks the symptoms of colds by restoring the alkalinity of your system.

Relieves sour stomach, indigestion, gas, over-acidity. All drugstores.

Writer Declares This Is Era of "Yes" Men

Compare, let us say, a thousand assorted pioneers of the Berkshire hills in Massachusetts in 1800 with a thousand assorted New York bank clerks in 1930, and, unless the monumental history of the Berkshires which I have lately ingested is a tissue of falsehoods, you will find about as many "no" men in the former area as you will find "yes" men in the latter. The ratios, I should guess, have reversed themselves in 130 years.

With the "no" men will lie character, courage, individuality, saltiness. With the "yes" men will lie radios, motor cars, bathtubs, and a complete paralysis of the will to act in accordance with their fundamental inclinations.

That Berkshire babies were compounded of better stuff than bank clerk babies, I absolutely deny. Opinion for opinion and belief for belief, it is probable that the New York thousand have a more civilized outlook, a better stock of human values in their heads, than had the Pittsfield thousand. But for the latter integrity was cheap and abundant, while for the former it is very dear. Like all luxuries, it can be bought, but few dare to pay the price. For the price may be the job, and the job means life or death.

While jobs grow more uncertain, desires, built in by the high-pressure fraternity, grow more clamorous. In this compound pressure pump, the wayfaring man finds it almost impossible to be true to his intermost nature.—Stuart Chase in Harper's Magazine.

Lose Fat Safely and Quickly

Kruschen Salts—(a perfect combination of the six mineral salts your body should have to function properly) purify your blood of harmful acids, and aid the kidneys and bowels to throw off waste material—the continual formation of which is probably the cause of your fat.

In this modern age of living, it's impossible to get these salts from the fancy foods you eat—but don't worry just as long as you have Kruschen Salts.

Take a half teaspoon every morning before breakfast in a glass of hot water—little by little that ugly fat disappears, you'll feel better than ever before—years younger, more energy. You'll soon possess that enviable beauty, clear skin, sparkling eyes, superb figure which only perfect health can impart.

An 85c bottle (lasts 4 weeks) at any progressive druggist in America. Money back if Kruschen doesn't convince you that it is the safest, quickest, easiest way to lose fat.

A Hartford woman writes, "I'll tell the world Kruschen Salts is wonderful stuff to reduce." An Ohio woman lost 10 pounds with one bottle.—Adv.

HEADACHES

Needless pains like headaches are immediately relieved by Bayer Aspirin as millions of people know. And no matter how suddenly a headache may come, one can at all times be prepared. Carry the pocket tin of Bayer Aspirin with you. Keep the larger size at home. Read the proven directions for pain, headaches, neuralgia, etc.

BAYER

She Followed Directions

Husband (at dinner)—This dessert does not seem to be a success.

Young Wife—I'm sure I followed the directions, dear. The recipe says to beat the whites of two eggs until stiff, and I'm so stiff I can hardly move.

Stomach Troubles Headache and Dizziness

If your stomach is sick, you are sick all over. If you can't digest your food, you lose strength, get nervous and feel as tired when you get up as when you went to bed.

For 10 years Tanlac has restored to health and activity many thousands who suffered just as you do.

Mr. Daniel Vinciguerra, of 6200 Stiles St., Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have not had a dizzy spell or a headache since taking Tanlac. My nerves are in better shape and I can enjoy a good night's sleep."

Let Tanlac help you too. It corrects the most obstinate digestive troubles—relieves gas, pains in the stomach and bowels, restores appetite, vigor and sound sleep.

Tanlac is made of roots, barks and herbs. Costs less than 2 cents a dose. Get a bottle from your druggist today. Your money back if it doesn't help you.

Big Irrigating Project

"Does your husband give you an allowance?" asked Mrs. Meek.

"No," replied Mrs. Strongwill, "but I permit him to have a small allowance out of what he makes."

Anybody's Guess

Griggs—I've never met your wife. She's a blonde, isn't she?

Briggs—I'm not sure. She's visiting a beautification parlor this afternoon.

Oh!

Old Lady—How is your sulphur selling?

Clerk—Oh, it's a drug on the market.

EXPECTANT MOTHERS

Faribault, Minn.—"During expectancy I could scarcely drag around, was up and down all the time, my nerves were bad, my back ached and I had other severe pains. I had taken Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription on previous occasions when I was nervous and run-down and it was so beneficial that I decided to take it again to see if it would help relieve me of my miserable condition. I am glad to say the 'Prescription' soon did build me up and restored my strength so that I was able to be up and around at my housework right up to the last."—Mrs. Albert Pirkl, 407—14th St.

Old Automobiles Turned Into Steel

400 Ancient Equipages Are Wrecked and Sent to Furnaces Every Day.

Detroit.—Bound for the maw of a roaring, open hearth furnace through which they will pass to live again as new steel, nothing can be quite so pathetic looking as the hulks of once proud automobiles moving slowly forward on the disassembly line of a great automobile factory to be wrenched, rent and torn for the last bolt or nut that can be put to some useful service elsewhere.

From Appersons to Westcotts—cars of makes long since forgotten—the line stirs the imagination to wonder, for instance, what notables may have ridden in that old gray hearse with its owner's bas-relief monogram still shining brightly through the junk yard grime, or what young lovers courted in that "nobby" roadster, its stern emblazoned with a picture of an ocean liner, a lighthouse and a sailing vessel.

Four Hundred Wrecked Daily.

Scores of men scattered along a dissembly line have been wrecking old cars at the rate of 400 every eight hours since last year, solving a problem as distressing to municipal authorities and property owners as it has been vexing, incidentally, to automobile dealers.

What such a wholesale wrecking program means in the removal from the highways of motor menaces to life and limb, in the elimination of the unsightly junk piles that litter the landscape, and in the conversion to new usefulness of materials that would otherwise go to waste, is obvious.

The derelicts hauled from junk piles or the old cars received in exchange for new automobiles are purchased from Ford dealers at a uniform rate of $20 a car. There is no restriction as to age, condition or make of car and the only requirements are that each must have some semblance of tires and a battery and that the cars must be delivered by the dealer to the plant.

Thus far the program has been confined to the Detroit metropolitan area and no less than 60 different makes of cars, many of them long since out of production, have been wrecked, the dealers hauling them to the plant five, six or even seven on "long-reach" trucks.

Nothing in the old wrecks that were once abandoned in vacant lots or left to rust on junk heaps is thrown away. Three conveyors, hundreds of feet long, in the open-hearth building of the Rouge plant are utilized carrying steel scrap to the furnaces or carrying toward the salvage department materials other than steel to be put to varied uses.

Everything Used.

As the derelicts move slowly along the conveyor a squad of wreckers attack them from all sides, tearing off fenders, bumpers, headlights, batteries, wheels and other exterior parts, while another group is removing the upholstery and interior fittings.

The glass which is still intact and can be cut to size is used to glaze windows in buildings about the Rouge plant, and the rest is sent to the glass factory to be remelted. Floor boards are sent to packing departments to be used as crating or box material.

The cotton and hair in the upholstery are separated, baled, and sold. Cloth and covers of all kinds, the leather from roof, sides, and seats are sent to sewing machines nearby to be transformed into aprons and hand-pads for workmen or buffing and polishing wheels. Gasoline tanks are crushed and baled for the ultimate recovery of terne steel.

Within slightly more than two hours after the old car is first dragged onto the conveyor it is completely demolished and the frame, crushed by a gigantic 20-ton press, is being rammed into the furnace. Aside from the myriad uses to which the parts and materials of such wrecked cars are put the salvaging process has thus far produced more than 20,000 tons of high-grade steel.

Woman Motorist Thrashes Policeman

London.—Police Sergeant Sheehan stopped a car and advised the driver that the rear plates on the auto were not adjusted properly. It was all right with the driver, but the woman with him, Mrs. Marjorie Kenworthy, who was his wife, objected. She got out of the car and administered a good beating to Sheehan.

Bullfighters Migrate; Sure Herald of Spring

Madrid.—Just as the northward migration of the birds indicates that spring is near, so the return from Mexico of the Spanish toreros serves as a reminder that the 1931 bullfighting season now will soon begin.

Meanwhile the managers of the various plazas are going the rounds of the ranches where fighting bulls are raised, picking the bulls which will perform later. The Madrid plaza has already contracted for the purchase of nearly all the bulls it will need, and although the bulls from Salamanca will be in the majority, there will be more Andalusian bulls in action than last year.

This news has been received with pleasure by the old-time fans, who like to see the live, nervous Andalusian bulls keep the bullfighters on the que vive.

CUT TOES OFF DEAD SO THEY COULDN'T COME BACK

Prehistoric Skeleton Found in Hungary Shows Mutilation of Feet Before Burial.

Chicago.—However much they may have loved him, when a man died among a certain tribe which inhabited part of southern Hungary in neolithic times, his comrades did not want him or his spirit to come back. At least, so it appears from a skeleton of a prehistoric inhabitant of Hungary which has arrived at Field Museum of Natural History, for the toes of both feet were cut off at the first joint before burial.

That this was a custom among the man's people is indicated by the fact that several other skeletons excavated from the same burial mound reveal the same treatment of the feet. From this fact, Henry Field, assistant curator of physical anthropology at the museum, suggests that these people, who lived some 7,000 to 10,000 years ago, believed that by mutilating the feet they could prevent departed souls from walking back to frighten or annoy their survivors.

The specimen received at the museum comprises not only the human remains but the complete grave with the original earth in which the skeleton was found. It represents the neolithic or late Stone age. With it are two prehistoric pottery vessels and part of a wild boar tusk which had been buried with the deceased. The skeleton is of a man about thirty-five years of age when he died, according to Mr. Field. It is of great scientific importance, as it is the only practically complete human skeleton representing this period of neolithic culture which has reached the United States.

The skeleton lies in the opened grave in a flexed position on its right side. Except for the missing toes it is an almost complete and perfect specimen. The skull is remarkably preserved, and the complete skeleton form a welcome addition to the anthropological collections of the museum. The original excavators in Hungary had bared only a small part of the skeleton, and then cut out the solid block of earth containing it and sent it to Chicago in this form. Final excavation was completed at the museum by Mr. Field, assisted by Bryan Patterson

WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times it's constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

Readily obtained at any drugstore, the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature and the name Castoria on the wrapper like this:

Ontario Farmer Claims to Own Oldest Reaper

Mr. William Dunn of Hilton Beach, Ontario, has a reaper he thinks about forty years old. When he dropped into the office of the Sault Ste. Marie Star recently he told about it, and was as proud of the machine as a man could be. Mr. Dunn still has the original paint on his reaper, and a repair bill for the machine of less than $1 for the whole of the time he has owned it. He never leaves the reaper out in the weather, and he believes in constant oiling.

An interesting feature of the story is that it was a second-hand machine, Mr. Dunn buying it in 1903 from a farmer who had used it eight or ten years. Mr. Dunn has used it on his farm since 1903, besides cutting some for his neighbors, and in all that time has needed only a new tooth for the reaper, he having broken one by forgetting to insert the pin which held the tooth.

"It is all intact and in good working order, and if it had a new knife it would be as good as new," said Mr. Dunn, who thinks there is not another reaper in Canada that has such a record, "and probably not in the world."—Sault Ste. Marie Star.

The Nation's Fuels

During 1929 the energy supplied by water power was only one-thirteenth of that furnished by mineral fuels in the United States, according to a special study by F. G. Tryon, of the United States bureau of mines. Anthracite coal and natural gas each supplied more energy than did water power, while oil furnished 3½ times, and bituminous coal 7½ times as much. If the figures for the work done by windmills, animals and the energy contained in firewood and miscellaneous fuels are taken into consideration, the proportion of water power in the total of the nation's energy supply is less than 7 per cent.

Prevent Fires

The 1931 annual Minnesota Forest Conservation Week has been set for April 24 to May 1, with Arbor and Bird Day being observed on Friday, May 1st.

"Tree planting, fire protection and good utilization are the conservative measures to be considered," Grover M. Conzet, Commissioner of Forestry and Fire Prevention, said.

"There has been from two to four times as much tree cutting in the wind breaks and farm woodlands during the last winter as in normal years. This was due to the extremely mild winter and the use of wood for fuel. Young trees should be planted to replace those cut.

"The woodlands should be protected both from fire and damage by pasturing. Fires, even the light grass fires, destroy all the young reproduction and slow up the growth of older trees. Cattle tramp down or eat the young tress and vegetation, and pack the ground so as to injure all growth.

"Conservation means good use. Care of the woodlands will pay. Select the dead and dying tress to cut immediately. Take out the deformed and diseased trees. Thin out several larger trees to give the young ones a chance to grow.

"Woodlands are valuable. They must be handled like any other crop to secure best results. Protect them, renew them, and use them."

Grass Fire

A grass fire which might have destroyed a lot of property, had it not been checked in time, raced towards the village from the west on Wednesday afternoon. Fanned by a strong wind and feeding upon a very heavy growth of underbrush, slashings and dead grass, the fire burned thru the groves on the west side of town and got close to the schoolhouse and creamery.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Young, which was circled in in the path of the heaviest flame was saved from detruction by help from the citizens of the village who rushed out to their place and started a wet sack brigade as the fire was right up their building.

While they were out the gang also went to the K. O. Burtness home and set a back fire and cleaned up a lot of old brush.

Card of Thanks

We want to thank all who helped to save our home from destruction by fire on Wednesday. We pray that God will bless you one and all for your help, kindness and sympathy in our hour of trouble.

Sincerely,
Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Young.

School Notes

High School

Again we are all taking six-weeks' tests.

We enjoyed the exhibit given by the 5th and 6th grades very much.

The high school boys are hard at practice getting ready for the baseball game to be played with other towns.

Our visitors for Friday were Alice and Eleanor Hall, Evelyn Haugen, John Doran, Agnes Nohre, and Ann Evenson.

Third and Fourth Grades

We are all making surprises for our mother that we will give to them on Mother's Day.

The 3d and 4th graders were invited to the exhibit given by the 5th and 6th graders and they enjoyed it very much.

The 3d graders finished their study of Holland by making a movie of that country.

First and Second Grades

Some of our new beginners are Marion Backlund, Pierce Hanson, Stanley Haukeness, Roy Johnson, Genieve Larson, Harriet Wahlin, Lillian Frederickson, and Reuben Kolden.

Leroy Frederickson, who has been going to school in Montona, is going to be with us now.

The first and second graders are keeping record of all the birds they see. Everyone said that vacation had been interesting. Now they are all as willing to work as play.

Gigantic Structure

Herodotus estimated that 100,000 men were engaged for 20 years in building the Great pyramid.

A crowd that filled the High School auditorium to capacity, attended the declamatory contest held there last Thursday evening. The contest was sponsored by the local W. C. T. U. and a beautiful silver medal which the offered to the winner was won by Eunice Johnson.

Learns Law in Cell; Wins Out

Son of Famous Woman Is Branded as Most Dangerous Prisoner.

New York.—"I think it did me good. When a man has seen the worst, life doesn't hold any terror for him."

Thus spoke Roy Sloane, boy prodigy, after being released from a year prison sentence last December.

Now, three months later, police are wondering if the sentence did the good Sloane said it did. They have hopes that another and longer term in Sing Sing will do what the first failed to do, although keepers there doubt it.

Detectives say they caught Sloane at the Miller building at 562 Fifth avenue, a few minutes after a $25,000 jewelry holdup had been staged. They are sure the twenty-six-year-old boy wonder was the brains behind the holdup, although Sloane, with devastating calmness that has caused police no end of despair, denies any connection with the "job."

Mother World-Famous.

His mother, Mrs. Anna Bogenhold Sloane, world-famous educator and founder of the Arts and Crafts Institute in Washington, is sticking by her boy, just as she has stuck by him through the years since he crossed the path of the law.

"Roy couldn't do that. They're trying to get him, I'm sure. They're jealous because he bested them. They're trying to put him back in prison," she insists.

There's no doubt that the minions of the law are jealous of Sloane.

He's bested them all—prosecutors, judges, detectives and policemen.

And what's more, Sloane is convinced that he's going to come out on top once again in spite of evidence that at the very moment three men were binding three employees in the office of Karos & Stein and taking the jewelry, Sloane was in the same building. Furthermore, police say, victims have identified him. Later the loot was found scattered over the building. An identified accomplice, Jack Giller, was caught within a few minutes after the stickup.

Sloane, with a brilliance that astounded veterans of the bar has talked himself out of jail before, but the cops say he's in a tougher spot this time.

Whether he can talk himself out of a second sentence—police are sure that they have enough on him to bring about an indictment and trial—remains to be seen.

"Twisted Makeup."

A peculiar twist of make-up, one of those things psychologists try to explain but somehow never impressively, and there you have the story of Roy Sloane.

Mrs. Sloane, holding degrees of B. A., M. A., Ph. D., from various universities, a former investigator for the Department of Labor, and author of several books, had wanted him to be an engineer. From her Sloane had inherited his brilliance.

While a student at Carnegie Tech young Sloane suddenly astonished his professors and friends by getting mixed up in activities involving stolen goods. For these activities he served a sentence at the Pennsylvania Training school.

Mrs. Sloane, who before Roy's birth, concentrated her thoughts in hopes that the child would be brilliant, after his release helped him along. While selling automobiles he took extension courses at Columbia university.

Then Mrs. Sloane suffered a severe shock. Her boy had been picked up in a stolen automobile and found with, according to the police, "the most complete set of automobile keys it has ever been the dismay of the New York police to see."

For this he got five years, but was resentenced to serve ten when the term at the Pennsylvania institution was revealed. That was in 1927.

Sloane seemed a model prisoner at Sing Sing for a while. Then, an alert guard found that parts of Sloane's cell bars had been cut and filled with putty which blended almost perfectly with the coloring of the real bars.

A key, made with a file and radiator valve handle, an imitation revolver fashioned out of another piece of metal, a keeper's hat, sixteen one-foot lengths of pipe, and other paraphernalia contrived to aid his and other's escape from the prison, were turned up by the authorities in quick succession.

Then Sloane got himself "in dutch" sure enough. Guards found a pair of brass knuckles on his person. Ordinarily, one found with such a weapon is guilty of a misdemeanor. It becomes a felony when found on one serving a prison sentence.

Brought back to White Plains to face trial for this possession of unlawful weapons, Sloane, just as the proceedings were about to commence, waved his astonished lawyer, Stewart Baker, aside. Although he had at the time never studied law, he asked permission to conduct his own defense.

Fought Own Battle.

Before an astonished judge, and jury, dressed in prison garb with a stripe on his arm signifying his "isolation" as a prisoner, Sloane questioned and objected, called this and that irrelevant and fought over admission of certain evidence.

A letter from his mother, at that time in India gathering material for a book, Sloane said, dissuaded him from attempting a jail break and at the time he was caught, he said, he was removing the implements so that stool pigeons wouldn't see him.

"If I had intended to escape," he cried, "I could have got a real pistol at the prison. It is easy to get a pistol at Sing Sing. Instead of making a hacksaw, I could have got a real good one there."

And to prove that he could, Sloane produced from his garments a complete set of tools, two chisels and a screwdriver!

The jurors went out. It was reported that they had stood six for acquittal and six for conviction. They filed back, asking to see the weapon. Sloane had sworn that the brass knuckles, carved from a valve of the top of a steam pipe, had been meant to be used as a lever in opening the lock of his cell door. A juror discovered that the weapon had been filed so as to permit the insertion of fingers. The result was a verdict of guilty and an additional sentence of seven years for Sloane.

Studied Law in Prison.

Sloane went back to Dannemora as a dangerous convict. There he studied law, preparing for the appeals from his first conviction.

Finally he won out. He convinced a jury that he had not been connected with an automobile stealing ring. In summing up his side of the case, Sloane argued for more than two hours.

Sloane thought he had won complete freedom and when County Judge Frederick P. Close wouldn't free him and urged him to work on another appeal, Sloane returned to Sing Sing.

By a gradual series of appeals which took him through court after court and even into the federal tribunals, the court of appeals ruled that Sloane should not have been convicted of a felony but of a misdemeanor for carrying the brass knuckles. Therefore, should have been sentenced to only one additional year.

Having already served three years, Sloane was therefore a free man.

English Vet, Blinded in War, Passes Exam to Bar

London.—Capt. Ian Fraser's passing of the bar examination is a tale of pluck and a hard fight against blindness. Captain Fraser lost his sight during the war. When he got back to England he set his mind on becoming a lawyer. He had his friends and family read him hundreds of books on law, and these he succeeded in memorizing. His brilliant mind aided him in passing the examination.

The old princess was now really in charge of the house. The Bolsheviki had taken from her her own residence, and she took great pleasure in telling Musia how they did it and what she said to them; but when she had finished, the girl was conscious of the fact that she did not remember a word of it. The princess asked her the cause of her estrangement from her mother.

"Do not ask me, I beg," said Musia. "I can only tell you that I can never speak to her again. I cannot tell you any more. I wish I knew where to go away from here. I must go!"

"This is madness, my love," exclaimed the princess. "And she talks the same way. Your griefs have made you a little insane. You are all that is left of the family, and it is very wicked for you to feel in that way—or would be if either of you were responsible; but you are not. Why, she mutters that you killed Ilya. When I tell you that, you must see that it is your duty to forget what she has said or done, whatever it is, and forgive her, and when she will allow it, to comfort her. Lie down and sleep, dear, and you will feel better. And you must pray. Nothing will help you like prayer."

After this conversation, Musia was quite resolved that she would go away before her mother should leave her room, if only out into the streets and roads, to join the great troops of refugees which swept over Russia like storms of human beings.

She carefully counted over her little store of money, and placed it in a safe and convenient place with her few jewels, and a very unique and beautiful watch which Ilya had once given her. When she had a good opportunity, she secreted in her room several loaves of bread, and some bits of dried beef—the instincts of the hoarding animals and birds developed and controlled her. Whenever she questioned herself as to what these actions meant, she simply thought that she could never meet her mother again. This was not hate, she told herself. It was the impossibility of ever speaking to her again—after that!

When Princess Khaborovskaya had left her after telling her of the strange things her mother had said, Musia suddenly came to what she considered a final decision. She would wait no longer. She began looking over her clothes in order that she might select the indispensable things which she must take with her; but even as she held the garments in her hands, she would look away into vacancy, and drop them on the floor. When the maid, Sasha, tapped at her door, Musia started up with a little scream of terror. The maid came in with apologies. There was a strange woman waiting to see Musia, who would give neither her name nor her business, but said the young lady would see her "if she knew."

If she knew! Musia already knew.

"Let her come here," said Musia.

To Musia, she was only a Tartar woman; to Loris she was "grandmother." She moved with a tinkling sound like the music of strings of little bells, as the many copper and silver coins which hung from neck, wrists and the black braids of her hair, struck against one another as she moved, and especially as she made the obeisance of the days of old on entering. She smiled as she began her speech, and Musia noticed that her teeth were blackened, showing that she was a married woman. She spoke in the broken Russian of the Tartars.

"I bring you something," she said.

Taking off her shoe, she slipped from under the sole a small folded slip of paper, which seemed to have been torn off a blank form of some sort. Musia's heart fluttered and her fingers trembled as she unfolded it, turned it to the light, and read:

"I am more sorry than words can express. I risked my life to save your brother, and I would have given it if it could have sufficed to save him. Perhaps I have given it—but if so, what of it?

"I am always waiting for you; but I can not wait much longer. Unless you come at once, you may not find me. Come, my dear!"

"L."

Musia folded the paper and thrust it into the bosom of her gown—then she took it out and unfolded it. The Tartar woman, watching her, saw how Musia treated the letter, and smiled. Musia caught the smile, and in a little embarrassment, walked once or twice back and forth across the room; then she turned to Loris' messenger—and heard the tinkling of the coins as they went out of hearing down the passage. After all, she said to herself bitterly, she had one friend.

From that time on, she began to think of him as really her friend, as one who loved her; and a warm feeling grew up in her breast toward him. What did he mean by saying that perhaps he had really given his life in trying to save Ilya? She longed to see him, and talk with him about this. There was really nobody else in the world—in what was left of the world—whom she cared to see.

It seemed as if she must talk to some one about Loris: so she began far away from him in a conversation with the Princess Khaborovskaya, first discussing her affairs generally, and then her father and mother—but when she reached the point of bringing Loris in she was overcome with shyness and shame, and the thought of where the discussion might lead.

She was, after all, only a timid child, hedged about with old conventions, with humiliations, with perplexities and with perils.

Matters went on much as usual the day after she had received Loris' note; but Musia felt that their mere going on was in itself a fateful change, like the movement of a ship into new regions while one slept. And the little princess told her that Mrs. Krassin had arisen, been dressed, walked about, and would no doubt be down next day. This was great news in the old mansion, and Sasha the maid retold it to Musia with a very great deal of satisfaction.

And even as the maid was giving Musia all the particulars about her mother, of how she moved about, how weak and trembling she was, but how very much better, there was a deafening rapping and pounding at the street door, the sound of a great car in the street, now at most times so silent, and Sasha, having gone at Musia's request to find out what was the matter, came back breathless and said it was the Bolsheviki again.

It was the same squad that had been there weeks ago and looked over the house. One of the soldiers was a man she had got acquainted with that other time, and he said that Tovarisch Vilinsky was now really coming there to make this his headquarters. And they must not move out any of the furniture, nor must the family leave the place. These were orders.

Musia started up, all her terror of Vilinsky flooding her being. She must fly—anywhere away from this house. She turned to speak to Sasha, but the girl was gone. Everybody was in panic; there was a subdued scurrying all over the house.

Panic took possession of Musia. She took from a closet her little bag and put into it the few necessary articles of clothing which she had selected. She quickly dressed for the street, taking what money she had and her few jewels in a little purse. These things she did automatically. She wondered again whether or not she should die of starvation, and with a strange attention to details, she took under her arm a box of chocolate bonbons which she had had for a very long time—but she forgot the bread and meat which she had smuggled into her room, though it lay before her very eyes on a shelf of the closet.

When she left the room with her chocolate under her arm and her little bag in her hand, she almost ran into two of Vilinsky's sailors standing guard—two of the controlling faction among the Bolsheviki in Kazan.

She shrank back into her room. How should she escape? For that she must escape seemed to her an unquestionable necessity.

She was leaving the old place for ever—fateful words, which she repeated aloud—"For ever!" She should never see her mother again—the mother who had brought her into the world; who had been so good to her in her childhood; who had for so much of her life been the chief figure in it—who was still even now in their estrangement.

Tears came to Musia's eyes as she thought of old, forgotten, tender things; and as Sasha chanced to put her head in at the door to say something about the Bolsheviki, Musia called to her and arrested her attention.

"Where is my mother?" she inquired.

"In her own room," said Sasha. "She is putting on her black dress—and the lace jabot—coming down to face the Bolsheviki. Is she not wonderful?"

"Go to her," said Musia, "and tell her for me that I beg leave to see her. Tell her that I am going away—that I wish to bid her good-by."

Sasha looked at Musia in wonder as if she could not comprehend the message. Musia repeated it.

In a Nutshell

What we are, like our shadow, always follows us.

Germany Has a Cheap Plane Without a Tail

Berlin.—The Stork, a tailless airplane shaped like an arrowhead with an eight horse power "pusher" engine attached to the rear of its 6-foot-long fuselage, was publicly demonstrated here. The plane, which will retail for $900, was designed by Alexander Lippisch.

The plane's stability will make it possible for any layman to learn to fly it with a few hours instruction, according to Lippisch. In landing vertical rudders are used as brakes and the plane needs only 25 to 35 feet for takeoff, he said.

All the controls are arranged on the wings being operated separately on either side. The absence of a tail and chariot, in addition to aiding the pushing capacity of the propeller, affords aerodynamic advantages that make it possible for the plane to reach a speed of 78 miles an hour despite its low power, an eight horse power engine.

A DOCTOR'S ADVICE for Stubborn Bowels

"Drink at least six glasses of water daily—preferably before meals. Eat bulkier foods, such as vegetables, fruits and coarse breads. Use a mild laxative as needed."

That is Dr. Caldwell's advice to people with stubborn bowels. He specialized on the bowels; treated thousands for constipation and its ills. The prescription he used over and over in his practice has become the world's most popular laxative! "Syrup Pepsin," as it is now called, was tested by more than 47 years of practice.

Today you can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drugstore in America. It is always the same; made exactly according to the original prescription, from laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other valuable ingredients. Nothing in it to harm even a baby. It does not gripe, sicken or cause any discomfort. But it moves the bowels; it gets rid of all the souring waste which clogs the system; makes you bilious, headachy, gassy, bloated, weak, half-sick. A doctor should know what is best for the bowels. Syrup Pepsin is a famous doctor's choice of a safe, pleasant, effective laxative for men, women, older folks, babies and children.

LOVE BRIDGED 3,000 MILES AND 16 YEARS' SEPARATION

Poet Is Now Happily Married to Girl He Met in Lodging House Kitchen.

New York.—Three thousand miles and 16 years separated Benjamin De Casseres, poet and cynic, from the woman he loved—but they overcame the obstacles of space and time and now are happily married.

The facts of this strange love affair have just been revealed by De Casseres himself. As to his present happiness:

"If every couple on the planet were going to get a divorce tomorrow, the gods themselves would gamble that Benjamin would not," he writes in the Cosmopolitan.

The marriage of the poet and Mrs. Mary Adele Terrill Jones (she is one-quarter Indian, and Blo is her Indian name), has lasted 11 years. "In our 11-year marriage, the first 16 years were the hardest," DeCasseres declares.

The poet met Mrs. Jones in 1902, when he was working on the old New York Sun. He worked nights, and one November morning, when he returned to his East Thirty-fourth street lodging house, he saw her for the first time. She was in the kitchen, sipping a cup of coffee. She wore a fiery-red jacket.

"From that November morning until she left in March, 1903, I saw her only four times, each time briefly," he says. "In that time I never touched her hand. I—reputed to be a brilliant and dynamic talker—was a perfect idiot in her presence."

Mrs. Jones was the wife of Henry C. Jones. With her husband, she moved West, living on the Tonopah desert, in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Berkeley and Reno. For 15 years she and DeCasseres wrote almost daily letters.

"They were like a pavement of paper between the West and the East over which our hurrying and love-winged feet sped as fast as thought and passion could travel," the poet says in his Cosmopolitan article.

Belled Buzzard Rings Way Into Old Haunts

Hagerstown, Md.—The belled buzzard was back in its old haunts recently, according to Lesher Kreps, Williamsport, who saw the famous old bird near Woodpoint. The men were driving along the road when they saw the bird, flying low, and distinctly heard the bell.

The buzzard is believed to be the same one captured along the Potomac river last year and kept in captivity for a while and then released.

The bird has a large bell around its neck, secured with a wire. It has been seen in many parts of the country for the past 25 years, but always comes back to this valley early each spring.

Songs the Cowboys Sang

"On the Western Trail"—A cowboy group, the work of the famous woman sculptor, Sally James Farnham, recently exhibited in New York.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE of the current Broadway stage successes is a play which bears the title of "Green Grow the Lilacs," and sophisticated Gotham, which doesn't usually think a song is worth singing unless it came out of Tin Pan Alley, is delighted with the songs in that play. And the majority of them had their origin, not in New York, but in the Southwest—they are songs which the cowboys used to sing!

This incident is another example of the increasing interest of Americans in the folklore of their country. That interest has manifested itself in various forms—in the popularity of the negro spirituals of the South, in the revival of singing of ballads of past generations (ballads which prove conclusively that, although many of them trace back directly to the old English ballads, America had a native balladry) and in the wider dissemination of the legends of Paul Bunyan, Pecos Bill and John Henry, myth heroes created in the fertile imaginations of the lumberjacks, the cowboys and the negro railroad workers, respectively.

The play referred to above takes its name from a song, "Green Grow the Lilacs," which has been sung in the Southwest for generations. Its origin is veiled in obscurity. One critic has ventured the opinion that it traces its ancestry back to Robert Burns' poem, "Green Grow the Rashes." If so, perhaps somewhere in the line of descent may be found a song popular with the American soldiers during the Mexican war, "Green Grow the Rushes, O!" and there is a legend that the Mexican name for Americans, "gringoes" is a corruption of the words "green grows."

Another of the songs of this play which is said to have been an old favorite in the Southwest, hence was well known in Oklahoma, the native state of Lynn Riggs, author of the play, is "My Name Is Sam Hall." There is no doubt about the origin of this song for it comes from London where it was a cellar ditty. In 1848 W. G. Ross, a Scotch low comedian, was singing in Cider Cellars in Malden Lane, Covent Gardens, (the original, incidentally, of Back Kitchen in "Pendennis") and "My name is Sam Hall," was one of his "hits."

How did this song find its way to the old Indian territory? Did some adventurous Cockney carry it there or did some disgraced "younger son," who could not live in England and who had fled to the American frontier where no questions were asked about a man's past, first sing it along the banks of the Canadian or the Cimarron? No one knows! But the cowboys once sang it on the Oklahoma range and it is their version, slightly changed from the original English version, which is being sung on Broadway today.

In reality, though, this is not so unusual for an examination of the collection of old cowboy songs, made by John A. Lomax of Texas several years ago, will show that many of the favorites among the cowboys, especially those of the more sentimental type (and the cowboy was strong for the song which dripped with sentimentality!) closely resemble some of the old English ballads and probably trace directly from them. Some typical ones, given in the Lomax collection, are those which bear the titles "Bonnie Black Bess," "Fair Fannie Moore," "Her White Bosom Bare" and "Young Charlotte."

More than that, investigators of this type of folk song have revealed the fact that many of the best known cowboy songs are nothing more than adaptations of sentimental ballads of an earlier day. This is true of one of the most famous of them all—a song variously known as "The Dying Cowboy," "The Cowboy's Lament" and "The Lone Prairie," a song of innumerable verses and of many variations both as to the wording of the different stanzas and the chorus which follows each stanza. In practically all versions the first stanza is the same:

"Oh, bury me not on the lone prairie."
These words came low and mournfully
From the pallid lips of a youth who lay
On his dying bed at the close of day.

By making allowance for much "local color" it is easy to see how "The Lone Prairie" song was adapted from the song, "The Ocean Burial," words by W. H. Saunders, music by G. N. Allen, which appears in "The Nightingale," a book of songs for "Juvenile Classes, Public Schools and Seminaries," compiled by W. O. and H. S. Perkins and published by Ditson in 1860. The first verse of "The Ocean Burial" tells how:

"O, bury me not in the deep, deep sea."
The words came low and mournfully
From the pallid lips of a youth who
lay
On his cabin couch at close of day.

and its other numerous verses describe the deathbed scene minutely and with a wealth of detail, only, of course, the scenes are laid on the "deep, deep sea" instead of the "lone prairie-e-e."

Nearly as famous a cowboy song as "The Lone Prairie" is another also variously called "The Cowboy's Lament" and "The Dying Cowboy," which has this chorus:

"Oh, beat the drum slowly and play
the fife lowly,
Play the Dead March as you carry
me along;
Take me to the churchyard and lay
the sod o'er me
For I'm a young cowboy, I know I've done wrong."

Different authorities on cowboy songs and other native American ballads credit the authorship of this song to various persons and the usual statement is that "it appeared on the ranges in the early eighties." Although it is difficult to determine the authorship of a ballad, since such a song usually represents the contribution of a succession of amateur bards rather than the work of a single poet, it is my belief that, as nearly as the authorship of "The Cowboy's Lament" can be determined, credit for it belongs to the late F. H. Maynard of Colorado Springs, Colo., an old-time cowboy. Here is his story as he told it to me several years ago:

"During the winter of 1876 I was working for a Grimes outfit which had started north with a trail herd from Matagorda Bay, Texas. We were wintering the herd on the Salt Fork of the Arkansas river on the border of Kansas and Indian territory, waiting for the spring market to open at Wichita.

"One of the favorite songs of the cowboys in those days was called 'The Dying Girl's Lament,' the story of a girl who had been betrayed by her lover and who lay dying in a hospital. I don't remember all of the song but it began something like this:

As I walked down by St. James hospital,
St. James hospital, so early one day, etc., etc.

"I had often amused myself by trying to write verse and one dull winter day in camp, to while away the time, I began writing a poem which could be sung to the tune of 'The Dying Girl's Lament.' I made it a dying ranger or cowboy instead of a dying girl and had the scene in Tom Sherman's barroom instead of a hospital.

"Tom Sherman was a noted character in the old cattle trail days, a big strapping fellow six feet six or six feet seven tall, who first ran a dance hall and saloon in Great Bend in 1873 and then moved to Dodge City where he ran the same sort of place until some time in the '80s. All of the cowboys who came up from Texas knew Tom Sherman.

"After I had finished the new words I sang it to the boys in our outfit. They liked it and began singing it. It became popular with the boys in other outfits who heard it after we had taken our herd to market in Wichita the next spring and from that time on I heard it sung everywhere on the range and trail."

So "The Cowboy's Lament" is another example of a favorite cowboy song which was an adaptation of an earlier ballad. Mr. Maynard's version, written in 1876 and thus antedating other versions by five and possibly ten years, had for its first verse the following:

As I rode down by Tom Sherman's barroom
By Tom Sherman's barroom so early one day,
There I espied a handsome young
ranger
All wrapped in white linen, as cold as the clay.

"I see by your outfit that you're a ranger."
The words that he said as I went riding by,
"Come, sit down beside me, and hear
my sad story,
I'm shot through the breast and know
I must die."

CHORUS:

Then muffle the drums and play the dead march;
Play the dead march as I'm carried
along;
Take me to the churchyard and lay
the sod o'er me,
I'm a young ranger and know I've
done wrong.

The version of this song, as given in Lomax's collection and as it is often reprinted, starts out:

As I walked out in the streets of Laredo,
As I walked out in Laredo one day,
I spied a poor cowboy wrapped up in white linen,
Wrapped up in white linen as cold as
the clay.

"O, beat the drum slowly and play
the fife lowly,
Play the Dead March as you carry me
along;
Take me to the green valley, there lay
the sod o'er me,
For I'm a young cowboy and I know
I've done wrong.

I see by your outfit that you are a cowboy,"
These words he did say as I boldly stepped by.
"Come sit down beside me and hear
my sad story;
I was shot in the breast and I know
I must die."

From which it will be seen that in the years in which the fame of this "poor cowboy who done wrong" has spread the scene of his untimely demise has been changed to Laredo, Texas. But before it is too late, I want to register this footnote to history and say that it took place in Dodge City, Kan.! I know, because the man who killed him (in a song) told me so!

Pretty Romance on Music

By JANE OSBORN

(©, 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service.)

JUANA MAPES had been taken on the staff of Smart Modes, as an associate editor and the important title she bore did a good deal to make up for the fact that her salary to begin with amounted to but fifteen dollars a week. She had scrimped and scraped for four years to get her college degree, and it did seem a bit of a hardship that now she should have to take less for her services than most girls did just after leaving high school. Still she was doing the sort of work she wanted to do and she was an "associate editor."

"Of course, you won't expect to live on what you make for several years," said the editor in chief when she talked the situation over with Juana, "but what you make may at least pay your lunches and taxi fares."

"And one of the things that goes with your job," continued the editor, "is to write the musical reviews. My secretary will give you the tickets to concerts that come, and from them and the music magazines you can get together your review."

"But I'm not musical," said Juana, regretfully. "I don't know one note from another. I couldn't whistle Yankee Doodle. I—"

"All the better," said the editor with an air of having dismissed the matter. "If you were musical you might try to write high-brow reviews. All we want is the smart, smattery sort of thing."

Juana was bewildered and discouraged at the first symphony concert she attended. She studied the program carefully to see whether it would offer any explanation of the performance. She turned around to regard the expressions of the audience. Their faces were practically expressionless —they all looked about as animated as patients waiting in a dentist's office. Perhaps, thought Juana, this betokened patience, that they were waiting for something to be played that would be different. But nothing did happen—nothing that gave Juana inspiration.

She observed, however, that the young man beside her occasionally jotted something down on a small notebook. He was listening intently. Apparently, thought Juana, he was one who understood.

Two days late Juana went to another concert, occupying the same seat in the same auditorium, and to her distinct satisfaction found the same young man sitting beside her. He was, she learned, the musical critic of the Planet. She felt that if she could only get acquainted with him he might be able to help her to understand the music.

In the meantime she wrote her first review—she told in a light and readable manner of the musical outlook for the season, which she got very largely from the announcements of the press agents. And she described, in semi-humorous manner, the manners of a fashionable audience at a concert. "First rate," praised the editor as he looked over the copy. "If you knew too much about music you couldn't do that."

The third time that Juana sat beside the music critic from the Evening Planet she noticed that he looked at her as if he would like to have her recognize him. After all there was no reason why she shouldn't. At the first intermission Juana looked at him and said: "Wonderful, isn't it?"

"You mean—the music?" queried the man. "Why, yes."

That was the introduction. Juana didn't tell her neighbor that she knew who he was. But she wanted to let him know that she admired his work, for she read it conscientiously every Saturday when it appeared in the Planet.

"There was a fine review last Saturday in the Planet," she said to her neighbor at the first intermission one day not long afterwards. "I read it every week."

"You do?" queried the man. "I write that stuff," he added rather dismally. "But if you want to read some really snappy musical criticism you ought to read what's been appearing in Smart Modes. That's the kind of stuff that the people want—but you can't write like that unless you have been eating and drinking music all your life. It's spontaneous."

"Well, I write that," said Juana. "I don't think it's very good, though."

Her companion stretched out a hand by way of congratulation and Juana shook it in return. On the strength of their community of interest they had tea together after the concert. Before long they were well acquainted. Then the young man—Bob Turner—asked Juana to marry him.

"But I must confess something," he said. "I don't know a blamed thing about music, really. I'm about as musical naturally as an alligator. But when they took me on as dramatic critic of the Planet they said I'd have to be the music critic, too. That was part of the job—so—"

"Then I'll marry you," said Juana. "You see I really am one of the most unmusical people in the world, naturally. We'll be lots more congenial this way."

Irony in Story of the Famous "Fireside Song"

The erection of a boulder memorial to Eben G. Rexford, author of "Silver Threads Among the Gold," in a churchyard at Shiocton, Wis., is a reminder of the ironic story connected with the writing of the song. Rexford, who wrote the words while a student at Lawrence college, spent most of his life on a quiet Wisconsin homestead in a way befitting the author of the nation's fireside song, but Hart P. Danks, composer of the music, knew an altogether different life. Fortunately Danks and his bride in 1874, secure in youth, could sing their pledge that age would make no difference without forseeing the separation which the future held for them. Danks died friendless and alone long before the tranquil evening of their dreams, and she who inspired the song was equally as lonely years afterward. After the composer's death a son and daughter lived bitter lives, spent wrangling about royalties. At one time the quarrel reached such a pitch that the sister sought her brother's arrest for failure to turn over what she felt was her share. Even such a story as that cannot tarnish the song, whose acceptance by the American people was not on account of the greatness of either its words or music, but because it furnished a means for thousands to express one of their deepest feelings.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Found American Ink Best

The disclosure that American waterproof ink was used in preference to domestic or British inks to inscribe the names of Australian soldiers at the war memorial in Melbourne has created a mild political storm. Counsellor Luxton, lord mayor of Melbourne, replying to critics, said American ink was superior to all others and was used because the inscriptions were to last as long as possible.

REGULAR PAINS

The modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure you complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does nothing but stop the pain, so use it freely.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day or a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Castoria . . . for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing —immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for every-day use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on [illegible] reads. If you see Chas. [illegible]ature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

ELECTRIC SERVICE
--For--
The Modern Home

Electric Lighting was once the only electric service in a modern home and was considered a Luxury. Today, electric service is a Necessity. It has become the general house servant. It cooks, washes, irons, cleans, refrigerates, heats water, operates your oil furnace and performs many other tasks as well.

Its cost is nominal. Only a small fraction of the monthly household budget is used for 25th Anniversary

A party of about one hundred relatives, friends and neighbors, gathering unannounced at the S. H. Nohre farm home on Sunday afternoon, April 19th, pleasantly suprised Mr. and Mrs. Nohre and aided them in a fitting observance of their 25th wedding anniversary.

The honor guests, with the visiting delegation, thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon of social intercourse, etc., which followed, as well as the delicious luncheon, supplied by the visitors, which brought the afternoon to a close.

Mr. and Mrs. Nohre who have made their home on their farm southeast of Holt the past 17 years, are among the community's most substantial and popular citizens, and all people of the neighborhood will join in extending congratulations on the occasion of the 25th anniversary, with the hope that their golden anniversary will find them just as contented and prosperous as at this time.

Card of Thanks

We heartily thank all those who honored us with their presence on our 25th wedding anniversary last Sunday, also for the beautiful gift of silver ware, many decorated cakes and all the flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Nohre.

Spring Feed Shortage

A shortage of feed in the early spring causes many losses in your cream check. Production goes down. Cows eat stale and decayed feeds, and early weeds and dead grass, giving bad flavors to the cream. It pays to raise enough feed, but if you can't do that it pays to buy mill feeds to tide you over till the pastures are ready.

Swanson Named Co. Engineer

Harold T. Swanson of Warren, for several years past an assistant in the office of I. E. Quist, County Highway Engineer, was named by the county board at its last monthly meeting to succeed Mr. Quist as highway engineer following the latter's retirement from office on April 15th. Mr. Swanson's appointment is for the period of one year.

At its last meeting the county board also approved plans for the construction of 17 miles of road in the Red River neighborhood, the new road to provide a thru road graded to standard specifications, along the western border of Marshall county. New construction will involve the continuation of S. A. R. F. and C. A. R. 2, the estimated cost of construction work being $33,000.

Among other plans approved by the board was a project involving cleaning and repairing of Judicial Ditch No. 19, north of Strandquist, with the repair costs estimated at $3,000.

Tax Collections Drop

The March settlement recently completed by County Auditor Levi G. Johnson shows Marshall county tax collections to be $42,734.82 below during the period of Nov. 1 to March 1 than they were during the same period a year ago. Collections this year amounted to $128,257.31, considerably less than the average year, while a year ago they reached $170,257.31, an amount greatly in excess of the average year. the heavy tax payment resulting from the bargain sale conducted in the fall of 1929 when many people took advantage of the reduced rates prescribed by the legislature to clean up their unpaid taxes. Foreclosures by the state rural credit department and devastating hail storms that swept wide areas of the county last summer, farmers whose crops were destroyed being unable to pay their taxes when due, are contributing causes to the heavy falling off of tax payments this year.

APRIL RAIN
by Myrtle Halvorson

I love the April showers
That help the little flowers
To bloom in the month of May.

APRIL RAIN
by Omar Hanson

April rain makes pavement slippery,
And the robin looks for a hickory
April brings much rain showers
And right after comes May flowers.

APRIL SHOWERS

April showers bring May flowers
Bright and gay,
SoApril showers bring the flowers
For the month of May.

THE RAIN
by Adeloyd Larson

Here comes the rain, fairies gay,
Who watch the children at their play.
When the children stop their play
All the fairies go away.

MY CAT
by Adeloyd Larson

I have cat,
I call her Pat,
She's awful fat.
My cat that is so awful fat,
Sits in the barn when the showers come.
She is so glad when it goes away
For she can go outside and stay.

The Coming Of Spring

MANY savage tribes go through magical ceremonies to make sure that Spring will come. They believe that their weird songs and dancing and ritual really bring the warm air of Spring!

Civilized people, too, work for Spring, though with a different purpose. We plan quietly how to use this life-bringing season to our own practical advantage.

What are your plans for making this Spring profitable financially for you? Call on us if we can serve you.

Takes Victim on Fantastic Ride

Murderer Carries on Weird Conversation With Body of Woman.

Elizabeth, N. J.—A tale of a murderer's moonlight ride across the frosty countryside, with the nude body of the sweetheart he killed propped beside him, the weird mock conversation he had with her, and the eerie disappearance of both killer and victim, left New Jersey police with an unique murder mystery to solve.

Their only hope of solution seemed to lie in the bullet pierced body of a woman found near Sleepy Doswell, Va., recently.

Meanwhile a search for the fantastic night riding murderer is on in three states.

Swashbuckling War Vet.

The man sought is William Frazer, thirty-one, swashbuckling World war veteran. His philanderings with the maids of Rahway, N. J., have proved one of the liveliest subjects of gossip here recently, according to the authorities.

The slain victim is thought to be Mrs. Phoebe Stader, vivacious grass widow.

Frazer abandoned his wife and children in the Frazer home at Rahway, Elizabeth suburb.

Details of the ghostly ride came from Ira Jansen, a cousin of Frazer.

Recently Frazer drove to Jansen's home in Rahway just before dawn. He insisted that Jansen come out to the car.

"Meet the girl friend," was Frazer's way of introducing his cousin to his ghastly crime, Jansen told Prosecutor David.

"I stuck out my hand. I thought the woman was bashful there in the dark shadows," Jansen said. "Then I noticed she did not move. I saw she was dead and was horrified. But Frazier only laughed.

"'Get into the car,' he told me. He looked terrifying and wild. I got in. He laughed in a way that chilled my blood. He turned a flash light full on her. I saw she had been undressed. I saw she was Mrs Stader and I almost screamed. Frazer just cackled: 'The girl friend. Fine girl friend.'

Lost His Nerve.

"He chucked her under the chin. Then he told me to 'move the girl friend in the back seat.' I wouldn't touch her, I was too frightened. We drove out into the country. Then he pulled out a gun and said he would kill himself. He made some passes around with the gun and I thought he would kill me. But he lost his nerve and did not kill himself.

"We drove back to my house. He picked the body up and put it in the back seat himself and put the blanket over it.

"He went inside with me and went to sleep. I dozed off. When I woke up he was gone. He left a note telling me to send him money to the Sir Walter hotel at Raleigh, N. C.

"I got $260 of Frazer's money and went to Raleigh and gave the money to Bill. He was nasty. I said to him: 'What did you do with that woman's body?' He answered: 'None of your business. I got rid of it.'"

Corroborative evidence that Frazer killed Mrs. Stader came from the war veteran's wife, Mrs. Frazer, who has abandoned the Frazer home, placed a for sale sign on it and has taken her two small daughters to the home of relatives, said:

"Some time during that night my husband came bursting into the house crying: 'I've just killed Mrs Stader.' But he was such a chronic liar that I did not believe him."

Settles Balm Suit for $200; Refused Divorce

Atlantic City, N. J.—Harold N. Eichler put such a low value on his wife's affections that he lost his divorce suit recently in the New Jersey Court of Chancery.

When Eichler admitted he had settled a $10,000 heart balm action for $200, Vice Chancellor Robert H. Ingersoll took him in hand.

"A man who will sign a release of his wife's affections for $200 can't be believed," the jurist declared, "and therefore your petition for divorce is dismissed."

Foreign Talkies Help Students of Languages

Chapel Hill, N. C.—Education of youths through means of talkies has been put into operation here by E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina theater. Regular programs of foregn language pictures are presented each week.

So far, the pictures have been mostly in Spanish, French, and German. Most of the pictures are filmed in foreign lands. Foreign language professors of the University of North Carolina are enthusiastic about the plan.

Homestead in Path of Road Holds Up Work

Pittston, Pa.—Definite steps have been taken to remove "the house in the middle of the road" at Moosic near here.

The house, owned by John Garvey, has obstructed completion of the highway between here and Scranton for several years due to a dispute over price.

An award of $13,500 was made to the Garveys but Moosic borough was unable to pay the assessment, and the owners refused to relinquish their title until full payment was made. To date, judgments aggregating $70,000 have been returned against the borough as the result of the road construction.

Two bad turns must be made by motorists before they can pass around the Garvey homestead.

Little Dog Ties Up Paris Subway Traffic

Paris.—The subway service of Paris was interrupted for half an hour in order to permit the rescue of a terrier dog, hidden 15 days in a tunnel near Odeon station. Train drivers reported the dog had been straying about the lines, and they had had to stop several times to avoid killing him. The dog had become so frightened that police and firemen had to lasso it before it could be brought out.

"But," said the maid, "Tovarisch Vilinsky has ordered that none of us shall be allowed to go."

"Will you not go," said Musia authoritatively, "and tell my mother what I have said?"

With her look of astonishment rendering her face blank of all other expression Sasha went; and in scarcely two minutes she returned, looking blanker still.

"Your mother sends you word," said she, "that she does not wish to see you; and she said—I remember her very words—that she knows of nothing which she would rather say to you than farewell, but that she begs to be excused from saying anything!"

Musia walked out of the house without hindrance. Her mother's message seemed a matter of little consequence, as she skulked her roundabout way under the shrubbery to that back gate through which poor Vladimir had gone to captivity and death.

She opened it and stepped out into the street. It closed behind her, with a sharp click, as the spring lock fastened her out into the beast-haunted forest of Kazan.

She moved away a few steps, and then, turning back, she passed her hands over the outside of the gate as if it had been the face of a loved one, and kissed it good-by.

The day had darkened down into the early autumnal dusk. She could see nobody in the street. She walked off rapidly into the darkness. In the ancient mansion of the Krassins, there were now left of all that great family only a crazed old woman and an imbecile old man.

Down in the railway yards stood the luxurious vagon de luxe of Tovarisch Loris in its usual state of readiness for movement. And Tovarisch Loris himself came speeding down from a meeting of the council of commissars—a meeting in which Tovarisch Vilinsky had carried everything before him.

Vilinsky was now the favorite of the sailors. He had control. He was in position to oust Loris from his position of superiority; and he had been too smooth, to deprecatory to Loris even while remorselessly riding him down with votes, to leave any doubt in the mind of that experienced young man, as to how that control would be exercised. When Vilinsky was savage and discourteous, Loris thought, he was not dangerous; what he was when he tried to be courteous was a problem which Loris believed himself effectively to have solved.

"It means a rupture," said Loris to himself. "Well, even so, I might outgeneral him; but it is not worth while. Only one thing has kept me here so long—and that—"

The automobile stopped at his car, and he stepped out. He called to him the officers in charge.

"Is all ready?" he asked.

"Ready, your honor, as it has been for three weeks."

"Is all clear along the line?"

"All clear, except for the unexpected."

"Then send out orders to have the wires cut, couple the engine on at once, and pull out; the unexpected we have always with us."

He was leaving the Bolsheviki: he strode across the tracks, leaped up the steps, his heart beating high that the great adventure was under way. A jar moved the train; it was the engine being coupled on; his machine was working promptly.

In the car was the usual silence; but as he stepped lightly and buoyantly through the reception room, he stopped short. A little dark figure rose, s[illegible]ed toward him, shrank back and s[illegible]d still.

"You see," Musia said very simply, like a little child, "I came."

He stepped forward, swept back the curtains so that the light might solve his doubts, and stooping, peered into her face in the semi-darkness inquiringly.

"I have no one but you now," she said. "Do not drive me away!"

He took both her hands in his and pressed them respectfully to his lips. She lifted her face to his shyly.

"Be good to me," said she; "I am so tired!"

"My dear! My dear!" he half whispered, still holding her hands. "Do you think you can care for me?"

"I think I do," said she.

As she said this, the train swayed, rattled and righted itself, as it moved over the switch points out upon the main line. Tovarisch Loris—Tovarisch no longer—had made his sensational escape from Kazan: escaped in the very hour when Vilinsky had condemned him to death; escaped only a bare half hour before the company of sailors came to arrest him; escaped over the line which by his orders his adherents had cleared for his train, and whose cars he picked up as he made his wild flight.

To what? Safety?

There was never any certainty as to that. All sorts of reports were accepted and rejected in turn. The Bolshevik handbills called newspapers stated that he had got away with much treasure and a considerable body of men to the Cossacks on the Caucasian front. Rewards were offered for him dead or alive. Other rumors had it that he had won through to Constantinople. Others said that he had found refuge on a British ship in the Black sea, and with his young wife had made his way to America. The Bolsheviki stated that he was a mere robber and had carried away with him an immense amount of loot; this was answered in certain circles by the assertion that he had only restored the treasure to the Russian forces to whom it really belonged. And there were rumors that all the treasure he possessed, except his little girlish wife in her black dress, were certain rugs and curios. One thing only was certain; Loris and Musia had vanished from Kazan together.

Kazan lay next day stripped of its summer greenery, but otherwise as it had appeared when we first saw it.

The leaves had turned from green to gold, had fallen and mingled with the piles of filth in the streets, which were higher and fouler than ever. The mysterious old city, half European, half Asiatic, was more thronged with people than ever; but outraged nature here, as in all Russian cities, was taking care of that; for these human beings, crushed by the ruthless blind forces of revolution into the mud-ball called Kazan, were rapidly passing through the gate of typhus and plague and famine into a city more mysterious still.

The Cathedral of the Annunciation was there, and might be imagined as engaged in carrying on a debate with the Suyumbeka tower, judged by what they both had seen, as to the relative merits of Jesus and Mahomet. They now looked down upon Tovarisch Vilinsky in full command—awaiting a Marat to displace a Robespierre. They looked down on the old Krassin mansion, and in it upon an old woman with purple spots in her cheeks, tolerated because she was useful as a caretaker and housekeeper.

They looked down on a society in the last stages of dissolution. War, tyranny, anarchy had worked their will with the greatest of all empires, upon which thinkers had long looked as either the peril or the hope of the world according to what use the Fates might make of it. It still remains even more emphatically the peril or the hope of a world in which hope has become an essential need, with the scales sloping down steeply on peril's side.

Travelers still came over the hills bound for Kazan, but not so many as in midsummer; and now they drifted rather than traveled—drifted like human flotsam in some raging stream. People struck with palsy do not migrate; they drift. Of those who came now, none was of the sort who, when they caught their first glimpse of the city spoke of the Krassin family; and if one did, he spoke as do travelers, among the ruins of Nineveh or Babylon—of what was once.

Fate had struck that family down in ruins; but that was the usual thing in Russia. Over all the former empire it was the same. The people of the Krassin type had met their doom; and now the wave which had overwhelmed them was rising to engulf every mind, whether that of an aristocrat or not, which could not accept ready-made, the daily-altered formula of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. With which dictatorship, the proletariat had as little to do as the Krassins and their fellows. To all, save to the few maniacs who had overcome their keepers and assumed rulership, had come the same fate: desolation, disillusionment, dissolution, and the supreme trial of souls.

The Bolshevik organization is a mystery—a mystery full of terror. The people are afraid of what is safe, and they are not able to estimate the danger of what is perilous. They feel as one might in dealing with wild beasts which might lick one's hands or devour one, as a whim or appetite might suggest. One great element in the Terror lies in the inability of people to understand one another. Human minds become mysterious as they come under the sway of new purposes, are offered new temptations in the living of new lives.

How to train BABY'S BOWELS

Babies, bottle-fed or breast-fed, with any tendency to be constipated, would thrive if they received daily half a teaspoonful of this old family doctor's prescription for the bowels.

That is one sure way to train tiny bowels to healthy regularity. To avoid the fretfulness, vomiting, crying, failure to gain, and other ills of constipated babies.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is good for any baby. For this, you have the word of a famous doctor. Forty-seven years of practice taught him just what babies need to keep their little bowels active, regular; keep little bodies plump and healthy. For Dr. Caldwell specialized in the treatment of women and little ones. He attended over 3500 births without loss of one mother or baby.

POPE'S PERSONAL PHONE INSTALLED IN 30-DAY JOB

Telephone Engineers Encounter Many Difficulties in Ancient Vatican Buildings.

New York.—The difficulties of installing a modern telephone system in the century old Vatican City at Rome, especially as complicated by ancient walls four feet thick and the fear of destroying Michelangelo frescoes and other priceless masonry, were related by Pilade Leoni, engineer of the International Telephone and Telegraph company, who returned recently from the Holy city.

Mr. Leoni, who passed 14 months in the Vatican City constructing the system which provides 450 telephones for Pope Pius XI, and the 408 people in the Holy city, said that the most painstaking performance of all was the installation of the telephone in the pope's personal apartment. Only 20 minutes each morning, while the pontiff attended mass, were allotted the engineers, with the result that the work required an entire month compared to the ten hours it would have taken under normal conditions.

"I don't believe I have ever encountered such a unique situation," Mr. Leoni said. "The Vatican City is four and one-half miles square. We had neither maps nor charts. And when you consider that the whole area is honeycombed with buildings dating back to the Eleventh and Twelfth centuries, the very origins of which are obscure, you understand the task it was."

They had instructions, he said, warning against any disturbance of such works of art as frescoes, masonry, and relief work. When they came upon such art obstacles they were forced to do the work on the outside of the buildings and when they were blocked by the frescoes of Michelangelo in the Sistine chapel it was necessary to resort to underground tunneling.

The engineer said it was not unusual for his men to descend two or three stories underground, open some ancient door and find themselves in a dark dungeon. Another troublesome impediment was the thickness of the walls, often four feet through, in which the stone and mortar were so solidified by passing centuries that it was like trying to drill through steel.

Old News Item Tells of Queer Wooden Clock

Augusta, Me.—Augusta residents are wondering what kind of a clock they had in a church at Frankfort three-quarters of a century ago.

Their bewilderment resulted from the following new item, which appeared 75 years ago in the Kennebec Journal:

"In the Congregational church at Frankfort there is an old clock made of apple trees by an ambitious citizen of Monroe. It cost so much to grease the clock that it was found advisable to let it rest. A levee is to be held to raise funds for a new town clock that will not require so much oil."

Germany Has a Cheap Plane Without a Tail

Berlin.—The Stork, a tailless airplane shaped like an arrowhead with an eight horse power "pusher" engine attached to the rear of its 6-foot-long fuselage, was publicly demonstrated here. The plane, which will retail for $900, was designed by Alexander Lippisch.

The plane's stability will make it possible for any layman to learn to fly it with a few hours instruction, according to Lippisch. In landing vertical rudders are used as brakes and the plane needs only 25 to 35 feet for takeoff, he said.

All the controls are arranged on the wings being operated separately on either side. The absence of a tail and chariot, in addition to aiding the pushing capacity of the propeller, affords aerodynamic advantages that make it possible for the plane to reach a speed of 78 miles an hour despite its low power, an eight horse power engine.

NETTA AND HER HUSBAND

By FANNIE HURST

IF SHE had ever thought about it at all in that light, Netta would probably have thought the problem of her marriage unique. As a matter of fact, it was such a universal problem that it is not at all unlikely that in the 45 identical houses, five rooms, sleeping porch, built-in washtubs, that occupied the little suburban street where she had her home and being, there was a startling repetition of her self-same problems. Netta had been married for six years. There were no children. Her husband was an architect, with offices in the city. He was junior partner in a growing but not large concern and was a nice, clean, average example of a little community of men who get the 8:10 train at the little stucco station six mornings a week.

If he was a rather deadly average as to his politics, his religion, his credos, his pastimes, his home life, neither he nor Netta realized it.

The fly that fell into the ointment of the average married life of this average American couple, living the standardized routine of the hundreds of thousands of other couples, appeared rather suddenly in the sixth year of what might well be called a congenial marriage. Suddenly it came over Netta, whose interests in her pretty little home were normal ones, whose activities in her little suburban community were neighborly ones, whose prettiness had rather increased since her marriage than diminished—suddenly it came over this energetic little wife in her snug little home, in her snug little suburban development, that she was married to a husband.

It came over Netta one morning as she stood in front of her little dressing table, with her bare arms raised in the act of brushing her smooth coiffure of bobbed hair, that she had no lover. It was five and one-half years since the young architect, Frazier Maughm, to whom she was married, had so much as commented on any of the personable qualities that had seemed to capture him during the period of their engagement and the brief subsequent term of the honeymoon.

Almost immediately Frazier had committed the error that is typical of thousands of American men of his class. In the terms of his own father, who had once been rebuked by his own mother for a similar defection and had replied: "After you have run for a car, you sit down," Frazier had "sat down." He had begun the dangerous, the disillusioning mental habit of taking Netta for granted.

What was taking place between Netta and her husband was taking place in practically every one of those 45 identical houses on the standardized street of that standardized town.

The women used to talk about it at their bridge parties, at their afternoon gatherings, as they rode into town on their shopping expeditions. They talked about it wistfully and vicariously. The patter that took place among them was of starvelings. Motion picture heroes who eulogized their women in pleasant superlatives across the screen fascinated them. They were fond of saying among themselves that foreign men were so fascinating. It was wonderful to have your hand kissed. Fancy John kissing one's hand! He would explode all over with laughter. Ah me, yes, foreign men did have that something—

Bitterly, there came welling up into the little heart of Netta one day the realization that Frazier's morning kiss was a peck; that Frazier's evening kiss was a peck that sometimes actually skidded and hit her on the top of her nose. Demonstration between them had ceased. They no longer even walked the streets arm in arm. Let Netta come downstairs for a dinner party and a bridge in the neighborhood, radiant in a new little frock she had assembled for herself, and not so much as a cheep out of Frazier unless in the key of, "Say, you better go upstairs and put on a petticoat," or, "Rub some of that circus paint off your lips."

Never a tribute to her skill, her economy, her prettiness. Just rub-a-dub-dub of routine. Just lovelessness. Sometimes it seemed to Netta that her heart was dying of starvation. More and more bitterly she withdrew into herself, and yet, so far as Frazier was concerned, there was never a ripple on the equanimity of his consciousness.

Their life together had just become routine. There was no romance, no demonstrativeness. No unexpected show of interest and appreciation. Just one day after another of placid acceptance of things as they were by Frazier. One day after another of increasing bitterness and resentment on Netta's part.

It was Frazier's calm acceptance of things that was so maddening to Netta.

Netta was there to be pecked at when he came home evenings. That seemed to be all that he noticed.

Netta was there to see to it that his dinner was hot and well served, that it consisted of the things he liked, that they were cooked to his taste.

Crisp were his shirts. His clothes in orderly array. Spotless his abode. All things arranged as he liked them, with neatness, cleanliness and—only he was blind to it—charm. Netta was a good housekeeper, a good home maker, a woman who imposed her personality on her surroundings.

Because of Netta, Frazier started off to work each morning with cheerfulness and a feeling of well-being that a good breakfast gives. And Netta was there to be pecked good-by in the morning.

In other words, Netta was always there. Frazier took her as much for granted as he did his morning paper spread before his plate at breakfast, or his comfortable chair placed wherever the weather made it most comfortable—before a cheerful fire when the weather was raw, where it caught such breeze as there was when the evenings were warm.

Curious, but as the months stalked by there crept into the festering little soul of this woman a rebellion and even a sullen hatred of this sharer of her destiny. She used to turn her cheek for him to kiss in the morning as if it were so much leather. She used to stand within a radius of the embrasure of his arms, glorifying in her anger at the stupidity of the man.

And still Frazier went his way, rejoicing, attending his baseball games, doing his eighteen holes on Saturday afternoon, shellacking the little two-seated sedan, trailing bushes up the garden trellis. If he noticed a change that had come over this woman of his choice, he noticed it without comment. He took it all apparently as the normal procedure of two people whose lives have become welded.

Slowly there took shape in Netta's mind the determination to estrange herself from this so-called sharer of her woes and joys; to withdraw into herself; to let the circumstances of their alienation reach a climax. She yearned for admiration, the kind of adulation to which her blond loveliness was entitled. She was not yet ready to be finished with the exilir of youth. Frazier was.

One Saturday afternoon, however, something happened that nipped her whole plan of procedure in the bud. A trivial incident and yet it was to open Netta's eyes. In the end, it was to lessen her terrific disappointment in Frazier's inability to keep life a much fairer thing than he had succeeded in doing. It revealed to Netta that she had builded her judgment on superficial sands.

The estrangement which she had contemplated was never to happen—all because of this trifling incident.

On the Saturday afternoon in question, Frazier was crouching on the lowermost step of the veranda, sprinkling the rose bed with a garden hose. Netta, sullen, heavy-hearted, was sitting upstairs in a crisp organdie frock which she had just made for herself, reading a novel.

There came up to Frazier a door-to-door woman canvasser. From her window, Netta could overhear the conversation. She knew the scheme. It was an old one. A city photographer would make a life-sized copy of a cabinet photograph for a nominal sum, provided you paid the canvasser a deposit of two dollars. Then you were to receive a twelve-dollar portrait upon an additional payment of three dollars.

"I am not interested," said Frazier.

"Surely," said the canvasser, "there is some member of the family whom you would like to surprise with a portrait. How about your wife?"

"Nonsense," said Frazier.

Upstairs, anger smoldered in Netta.

"It won't cost you anything to let me see a picture of your wife," said the canvasser, a well-setup woman of intelligence.

"I don't know where one is," said Frazier.

"You don't know where there's a photograph of your own wife?"

"I hate them."

Upstairs, in her pretty frock, hot, swollen tears formed in Netta's eyes.

"Well," said the canvasser, "that's a confession. And you don't want a picture, then, I take it."

"No," said Frazier, "you're right, I don't. There never was a portrait could get her coloring or the kind of something that's caught up in her blue eyes or the expression around her mouth that no woman in the world ever had but Netta. I should say there isn't a portrait that could do her justice."

After the canvasser had gone, Netta, with bright pink spots on her beautiful cheeks, came downstairs, cool, crisp and radiant.

"Go upstairs," said her husband, who was sprinkling the lawn, "and put on a petticoat."

Official Radio Calls

By international agreement, all the countries of the world that have radio transmitting stations have been assigned certain letters and combinations of letters. For the United States the assigned call leters are N and W, also from KD to KZ. Japan has been assigned J; Mexico CY and XA to XD; Britain and the British colonies B, G, M, CF to CK and other combinations. In this country the call letter N is reserved for navy stations and WUA to WVZ and from WXA to WZZ for army stations.

"Military Honors"

When a man is buried with "full military honors" it means with the honors suitable to one's rank, and depends on the rank held by the individual at the time of his connection with the service. For example: A man in private life who has formerly been secretary of war would be buried with military honors suitable to the rank of secretary of war.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By Mary Graham Bonner

FRUIT TREE'S HISTORY

The Fairy Queen took a trip with some of the other fairies to where the banana trees were growing.

The fairies were so tired from the trip that they fell asleep, but just as the Fairy Queen was about to go to sleep she noticed that the leaves of the banana trees all around were laughing, actually laughing.

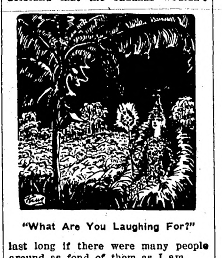
"What are you laughing for?" asked the Fairy Queen.

"We're laughing because we're almost ripe. It's so jolly to be almost ripe."

"Well, of course, I don't know," said the Fairy Queen. "I've never been a fruit, so I don't know what it would be like to be ripe or unripe."

"Ah, but we have such a glorious time growing, and while we last, we are so happy," the banana trees said.

"Don't you last long?" asked the Fairy Queen. "Of course, I can understand that the bananas wouldn't last long if there were many people around as fond of them as I am.



"What Are You Laughing For?"

"I am devoted to bananas. Yes, you really might say that I was devoted to them.

"So are many of us in Fairyland, too, and, of course, in the world of people as well."

The banana leaves laughed again. They made such a lovely sound as they laughed.

It reminded the Fairy Queen of the sound of a gentle summer rain.

"Some of our cousins have traveled on boats," the banana tree said. "Some have gone on trains, too."

"But tell me why you don't last very long?" the Fairy Queen asked.

"Because," said the leaves, "we are cut down when all our fruit has been taken.

"We are not nice any longer. We can never do the same work again, you see.

"But there are shoots that are taken from our roots. These are started off again, and they do the same work as we have done.

"Aren't you sad that you don't do the same work over again yourselves?" asked the Fairy Queen.

"No," said the leaves cheerfully, "it is enough for us to do our work well once.

"That's all we want. That makes us very happy. We love the warm sun and we have had our reward for our work.

"We have grown beautiful and ripe. Ah, ha, ha, we're getting ripe now."

The Fairy Queen's mouth watered and now the other little fairies were waking up.

They were both rested and hungry.

Such a banana eating party as they had, and the bananas seemed much pleased in their banana fashion that they were so much liked.

But after it was all over and the eating and the talking was finished, the Fairy Queen went back to Fairyland with the other fairies, and there she told everyone banana tree history, which they were all so glad to hear.

And she had a big bundle of bananas, too, which the banana trees had sent to Fairyland as their gift.

Captain Kidd

You can play Captain Kidd anywhere and any number of players can join in, the more the merrier. All the players stand in a ring, except one, and he is Captain Kidd.

Captain Kidd must do various things such as kick his right foot, his left foot, jump, hop, and so on, and he must say before he does each thing, "Do this," or "Do that."

For instance, he may swing his arms round and say, "Do this," then all the players in the circle must follow his lead. Then he will do something else and say, "Do that." But this time the players do not follow his lead. You see, they only copy him when he says, "Do this." When he says, "Do that," they merely stand still.

This is where the fun of the game comes in, for some of the players are sure to stand still when they ought to move, and others will move when they ought to stand still. Whenever a player does the wrong thing he stands out of the circle.

So the game goes on until there is only one player left, then he takes the place of Captain Kidd. The players all form a new circle and the game begins all over again.

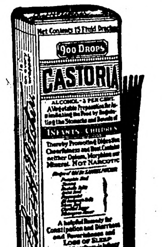
Fretful DAYS Restless NIGHTS ...give child Castoria

FUSSY, fretful, can't sleep, won't eat.... It isn't always easy to find just where the trouble is with a young child. It may be a stomach upset; it may be sluggish bowels.

But when little tongues are coated and there is even a slight suspicion of bad breath—it's time for Castoria!

Castoria, you know, is a pure vegetable preparation especially made for babies and children. When Baby cries with colic or is fretful because of constipation, Castoria brings quick comfort, and, with relief from pain, soothes him to restful sleep. For older children—up through all the school years, Castoria is equally effective in helping to right irregularities. Just give it in larger doses. What a comfort Castoria is to mothers!



Get the genuine, with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper and the name Castoria that always appears like this:

CASTORIA

Chickens Were Tough, but Sentence Tougher

There is a colored gentleman doing 90 days in the Knoxville (Tenn.) jail, evidently because the magistrate did not have a sense of humor. When asked by the magistrate if it were true he had stolen some chickens, as charged, the darky answered seriously:

"Yo honah, mah parents done put me in a most disastrous spot. Mah name bein' George Washington, Ah simply cannot tell a lie. Yessuh, Ah done took dem chickens. Fo' de honah ob mah name Ah's done got to tell de truth."

"And what did you do with those three chickens?"

"Ah et them, suh, an' Ah's tellin' de truth when Ah mentions dat dey was discouragin'ly tough."

"Well, this will be tougher," growled the judge as he meted out 30 days for each chicken.

Satisfactory

A recent snowfall was regarded by Jimmy, in common with all red-blooded twelve-year-olds, as delightful and accordingly he enjoyed it so thoroughly and strenuously that he was obliged to change his soaked garments no less than twice in the course of Saturday's play. As he was effecting the second change, he remarked thoughtfully to his mother:

"Do you know, garters are the most practical article of clothing that we have!"

When his mystified mother inquired the basis of his deduction, he explained: "Well, they're the only thing that doesn't get wet!"—Indianapolis News.

When You CAN'T QUIT

A headache is often the sign of fatigue. When temples throb it's time to rest. If you can't stop work, you can stop the pain. Bayer Aspirin will do it, every time. Take two or three tablets, a swallow of water, and carry-on—in comfort.

Don't work with nerves on edge or try all day to forget a nagging pain that aspirin could end in a jiffy! Genuine aspirin can't harm you; just be sure it's Bayer.

In every package of Bayer Aspirin are proven directions for headaches, colds, sore throat, neuralgia, neuritis, etc. Carry these tablets with you, and be prepared. To block a sudden cold on the street-car; quiet a grumbling tooth at the office; relieve a headache in the theatre; spare you a sleepless night when nerves are "jumping."

And no modern girl needs "time out" for the time of month! Bayer Aspirin is an absolute antidote for periodic pain.

Take Bayer Aspirin for any ache or pain, and take enough to end it. It can't depress the heart. That is medical opinion. That is why it is only sensible to insist on the genuine tablets that bear the Bayer cross. The pocket tin is a convenient size. The bottle of 100 tablets is most economical to buy.

Dumping

Again we are asked to call your attention to the use of the Village public dumping ground. Some years ago the village here purchased an acre of ground for this purpose out of the northeast corner of the L. Flak farm a half mile southwest of the village.

It is not any use to mention any more about the location as it seems that any one whom has any junk to get rid off, find the dump ground. The only thing wrong now is that some of you who haul your junk there don't seem to have any idea of how large or small a tract of land an acre really is.

The resul of the whole thing is that now someone has again taken a notion to ad more to this plot of ground and, have nerve enough to go and dump their junk on the alfalfa field on the south side of the acre. This must be stopped at once or else the village will have make a rule that you have to have a permit from the council before you can use the ground at all.

If the village should decide to close up this dump ground then, some of you careless fellows would either come to time or, else pay for the right to dump somewhere else. There are not many who would sell you space as a matter of fact, no one likes a dump on or near their place.

Also do not dump on top of the ground stuff that will stink a mile. Remember that there are farms close to the ground and the people living on them should not be harassed by the bad odor of things that you should bury.

Be a gentleman and use discretion for other peoples property and rights.

Agriculture Makes Gains

"The 1931 legislative session was favorable to agriculture, in the main the legislators endeavored to reflect the sentiment of the people as a whole," declares J. S. Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Minnesota Farm Bureau, who worked on Capitol Hill for the wishes of Minnesota agriculture as expressed at the last annual meeting of the Minnesota Farm Bureau.

"The legislative program of the Minnesota Farm Bureau was a success in every respect," Mr. Jones declared. "The Farm Bureau officials supported such measures as the membership had agreed upon at the state convention in January. This year for the first time legislative committees in a large number of county farm bureaus did effective work in appearing at the hearings and in keeping in close contact with their local representatives and renators."

Among the legislative measures adopted which were endorsed by the Farm Bureau were the state income tax amendment act, which provides for a referendum at the next general election; the prison machinery bill, which brings about a 15 percent reduction in the prices of prison machinery and a two cent per pound cut in the price of binder twine; the state-wide T. B. eradication act, the rural credits land tax refund, the grain storage act, special indemnity fund from dog taxes, and pipeline regulations.

With the passage of the highway bond issue act, which was oppossed by the farm bureau, agriculture leaders saw little value in the adoptiong of the four-cent gas tax, which had been urged by the Farm Bureau at its annual meeting, in line with its "pay-as-we-go" policy of road building. In breaking away from this policy through issuance of $15,000,000 worth of highway bonds, sentiment was cooled for the gas tax increase, it was explained.

Selvig Makes European Trip

Congressman C. G. Selvig, Representative of the Ninth district, intending to conduct a personal survey of agricultural conditions in various countries of Europe left on April 15th for Europe, accompanied by his wife and Prof. and Mrs. Paul E. Miller, director of the farm school at Morris. The party will spend some three months in Europe studying conditions in Germany, France, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Great Britain, Russia, the Balkens, and other foreign nations.

The data gathered Congressman Selvig intends to use in the preparation of a measure that will be beneficial to American farmers and will be introduced at the next session of Congress.

Thief Lake Game Project

With satisfactory adjustments having been made subject to approval of the county board and state tax commission, it now appears certain that Thief Lake will be restored to provide a game refuge and public shooting ground, according to W.O. Braggans, county attorney.

A conference was held in St. Paul recently between Mr. Braggans and W. D. Stewart, Minnesota Commissioner of Game and Fish, thru which adjustments were reached for the payments of ditch assessments and taxes. This adjustment, of course, is subject to final approval of the board of commissioners and state tax commission.

Meanwhile progress is being made in arriving at satisfactory settlements between the game and fish department and individual land owners in the effected area and as a result but few cases will be necessary for trial at the District court sessions to be held at Warren in May. Final disposition of the project will not be known until after the courts have made decisions.

Spring Feed Shortage
A shortage of feed in the early spring causes many losses in your cream check. Production goes down. Cows eat stale and decayed feeds, and early weeds and dead grass, giving bad flavors to the cream. It pays to raise enough feed, but if you can't do that it pays to buy mill feeds to tide you over till the pastures are ready.

A Candle in the Wilderness

A Tale of the Beginning of New England

Irving Bacheller

Anyone who has read "The Light in the Clearing," "A Man for the Ages," or "In the Days of Poor Richard," needs not to be told of the romantic interest which Irving Bacheller combines with a strict fidelity to facts in his historical novels—novels of America. No amount of labor in the way of combing over old records and reading authoritative works seems to be too great for him. It is known that he spends several years in preparing the materials of a historical romance. His patient research and his fine power of reproducing the thrill of events, the atmosphere of eras and the color of lives never have been more evident than they are in this story.

Here is an epic of colonial New England, both a love story and a pageant, with stern Puritans, justice under churchly direction, wild adventurers, earnest statesmen, stout colonists, patient mothers and demure maids, with now and then one of sparkling demeanor to shock the austerity of the times, wild youth to oppose the law's sovereignty and ever in the background the red man, lurking and bewildered, knowing not whether to murder or befriend.

Here is an exhibition of the hue and cry—the origin of that term—trailing victims into the pathless forest to the lodges of Kebec, to the Lake of the Iroquois and to the Long House, through the country of the Algonquins and to stirring episodes in quaint New Amsterdam and Boston. Into the fabric of the story step with the glow of reality such engaging figures as Sir Harry Vane and Roger Williams, such men of might as John Winthrop, John Endicott, Thomas Dudley and John Cotton; and playing an important part is that keen and humorous Amos Todkill, man of many battles and experiences, who was a companion of Capt. John Smith.

There are glimpses of that famous Ann Hutchinson, the woman with a tongue and a logic that confounded the strongest minds in the colonies. The love interest is carried by two dashing young chaps, cavaliers by training but Puritans by conversion, and a couple of maids of similar antecedents whose parents have come to the colonies to escape the oppressions of the Old world.

PROLOGUE

Which Relates to the Background of This Narrative

They called it the mighty deep. It was the Lord's Waste. Even the profanest men who, when ashore, were of a light and boastful carriage, venturing out upon it, even in "the great ships" of two hundred tons or more, had solemn faces and would be always kneeling with their betters at prayer time.

Those who went out to sea bound for the New world in the third decade of the Seventeenth century left behind them an England no longer the merry land it had been. It was rent, fettered and impoverished by two great tyrannies—the crown and the church. High prices had reduced the buying power of money. The gentry, whose lands were leased for long terms, and all men of unchanging incomes were sorely pressed. Europe knew but one great industry. It was war, the profit in which came from seizure, loot and oppression. Charles I had failed to make it pay. He was burning up the resources of his people and forcing loans to keep his armies in the field. Those who could not pay had squads of soldiers billeted upon them. Only the yeomen who had the fruit of mother earth to sell were prosperous. A land lust was abroad and many were thinking of that world in the west where land was plentiful and easy to be had. A new spirit was on English soil—a desire for peace and for a greater liberty of mind and conscience, a hatred of oppression, a faith in honest industry governed only by the laws of God and seeking only the fruit of its efforts.

The common folk had begun to read and dream of a better world. Of a stern and unemotional nature, they were now moved by a strange depth of passion to begin the building of it where no king or bishop could stand in their way. Many of the rich and learned—even certain of the great earls shared this passion. Under its urge some of their sons and daughters were braving the perils of the deep and an unknown wilderness.

To most of these adventures death was a familiar enemy. For some a sublime faith had killed their fear of it. They were in a temper for the doing of great things.

CHAPTER I

The Escape and the Voyage

The sky is overcast. A day in early July, 1634, is near its end. Two young men are riding at breakneck speed on a country road between hedgerows in the east of England. They are pursued by a king's officer. The Spirit of the Future is on the flying chestnut mares ahead. The Spirit of the Past is in the saddle behind them. He is lashing his lathered horse. Robert Heathers and William Heydon—sons of gentlemen in Lincolnshire, both twenty years of age—ride neck and neck into the falling night, leading by less than a pistol-shot.

They have been on a visit to their young friend, Sir Harry Vane, at Raby castle, Durham, the ancient seat of the Nevilles. This brilliant youth was a shining example of the new spirit in the young gentry.

"Castles! Silks! Waving plumes! Gold braid and spurs!" he had exclaimed. "What have they done for England? After a thousand years of wars and toils our great city is London with less than one hundred and seventy thousand people in it. We need mills where there are castles, saws instead of silks, crowbars instead of plumes, work instead of idleness, doing instead of undoing, religion in the place of pomp, holding enough reality to give us peace."

Harry could be outspoken. His father had been the cofferer of Prince Charles and was now a member of the privy council. At court Harry was laughed at as a lad with a twist in his brain. William and Robert, now fleeing on the highway, had been even more rebellious than he. At a public meeting they had openly denounced the tyrannies of the crown. It turned out that a spy heard and reported their words. Having no friends at court they were not to be lightly dealt with. The high commission had resolved to make them recant or suffer the pain of death. Now within a dozen miles of their home its officer had come upon them with a warrant.

The Young Men Spurred Their Steeds While a Pistol Ball Cut the Air Between Them.

The young men spurred their steeds while a pistol ball cut the air between them. A rain had fallen and the road was sloppy. They held their advantage. Other shots went wild above their heads in the dusk.

The lighter horse of the officer began to fail. The space between pursuer and pursued slowly widened. When the latter came down into their familiar fenlands they were shrouded in darkness, and as they drew rein, the officer was so far behind that the hoof beats of his horse were out of hearing. They leaped a hedge and, at a slow gallop, crossed a broad pasture to a tenant's cottage on the Heydon lands.

These young men were friends from the same neighborhood above and in sight of the Wash—blond, blue-eyed, comely youths nearly six feet tall—alike in experience and breeding, in height, weight and color. Their sunburnt, merry faces were of the same mold so that often one was taken for the other when they were apart. They had a like spirit also, and it was their fancy, growing out of their mutual regard, to help the resemblance by dressing in the same fashion.

The second sons of gentlemen they were a rash and heady pair of rebels. Their opinions were as common as short hair in their neighborhood, but generally spoken in a whisper among gentlefolk whose fortunes were indeed a part of the kingdom. These young men did no whispering. The soul of England and the courage of the young were in their voices.

On fresh horses they spent the night in travel disguised as the sons of yeomen in the use of whose dialect they had some skill. Next day they went aboard their ship whereon their goods had been safely stored. It was the Handmaid of one hundred eighty tons bound for Boston in the New world under the Puritan captain, John Huddleston, who was privy to their plans and who had a heart for more than wind and weather.

The Handmaid was in a calm some fifty miles off the Isle of Wight. Captain Huddleston sat with a number of his passengers on the poop-deck one evening. They could hear the cattle bellowing below. In calm weather a strong stable odor seemed to wrap the ship. Robert Heathers wrote in a letter to Sir Henry, his father:

"The captain, a big, portly, red-haired man with mighty forearms always bare, has sailed three times to the Plymouth colony.

"'On my first trip I made the harbor with the Fortune in May, 1622,' he said. 'I looks up at the shore and what do I see? Trees, trees, trees, and a few little houses and one bigger than the others all made o' tree bodies and roofed with marsh grass on a hill in a palisade and about fifty men, women and children runnin' down to the shore and wavin' their handkerchiefs. We lowered a boat and took water, me and two sailors. It were a cold, barren strip o' land. Satan was in the greenwood behind 'em, so big that it is like unto the sea—no man hath seen its end. The fiends o' hell inhabit it. The bitter salt winds o' the water waste land on the rocky slopes and plunge into the wilderness, knockin' down the high trees in their haste. His enemies be that strong and many that the God o' Heaven would 'a' found it hard to keep a footin' there even in the purest heart. I was o' a mind to blubber, tough old dog that I am, when the women and the young ones ran upon us cryin' and kissin' our hands. Every face withered to the bones and brown as an old sail. They was half starved. It broke the heart o' me to look at 'em. Did ye ever see a man come out to be hung? That's the way the men looked—solemn and kind o' wild. Their hands trembled when they shook my old rope hauler. Aye, it were a sight to wet the face o' ye. You whose bellies have been filled with beef and mutton and rich capons and good beer or old wine, what think ye these people had been eatin' to keep 'em alive? Roots, by the God o' Israel! dug out o' the wilderness, and dried berries and snails and mussels. I give 'em all the bread I could spare and flour—four ounces for each person a day to stead 'em until harvest time and some powder and bullets.

"'Half o' the whole ship's load who had gone over two years before was underground, rotted by scurvy, burnt up by fever! But these that met me were in no mind to give in. I swear, by the beard o' Pharaoh, I never seen the like o' it. They had a covenant with God, so they told me. Their feet were soul-tied. When an Englishman things he's right, it's easier to kill him than to change his mind.'

"I said to the captain that I thought it a shameful thing to take women and children into such a land.

"'Ye can't make way without 'em,' said the captain. 'Ye might as well say there shouldn't have been an Eve in the Garden o' Eden. Adam would have wore himself out searchin' for happiness. Men will never behave orderly without women and children.

"'Now, there was Weston's colony near the one at Plymouth—all able and lusty men. They were not agoin' to have women and children to put up with. They bragged o' what they would do and bring to pass. What happened? They stole the Indians' fodder and got their sides stung with arrows and their heads smashed by tomahawks. They powered themselves out, blew up. Couldn't stand it. Where there's men there's got to be women or afore long hell is ahead and the wind behind ye.'"

There were the usual incidents of a long sea trip. The passengers were roughly tumbled about. Sudden lurches of the ship threw them against one another and turned the dining table into a place of peril for the person and garments of those able to take food. All moved with great caution, clinging to fixed objects for fear of having their bones broken. A high wave in a fret of wind burst a window at night and created a panic.

Publicity's Value Well Known to the Ancients

More than 3,000 years ago, according to the London Morning Post, the Egyptians devised innumerable methods of bringing their names before the public; and by inscriptions, by historic monuments, and by the literature of the period, they left to posterity the records of a complete and systematic scheme of advertising.

In certain respects they made even more extensive use of publicity than does the present age. In the reign of Tutankhamen, doctors, unlike the modern practitioner, were allowed to advertise their remedies; and one of the more subtle methods used to attain this end was to compel patients on swallowing specific medicines to cry out, "A really excellent remedy proved a million times!" The art of repetition was thoroughly understood by Egyptian publicists; and it was customary to stamp wine jars with the word "Good" thrice repeated. Similarly they were well aware of the value of disguised advertisements; and experts now declare that the temples of ancient Egypt were in nearly every case built to advertise the power of Egypt's rulers. They were covered with accounts of victories achieved, and records of cities conquered.

Benedict Arnold

Authors differ on the birth date of Benedict Arnold. Appleton's Cyclopedia and Lippincott's Biographical Dictionary both state he was born January 3, 1740. Lossing's Cyclopedia of History gives the time as January 3, 1741. A carefully prepared and impartial history of the American traitor of Revolutionary times was written by Hon. Isaac N. Arnold, who fixes his birth date on January 14, 1741, and his death on June 14, 1801, in London.

"I TOLD YOU SO"

By FANNIE HURST

BACK in the days when "elocution" was a maidenly accomplishment, Clara Bailey Bunting taught that gentle art.

The two parlors of the modest home she occupied with her husband, Doctor Bunting, were given over to her work. It kept her busy. There were two babies, and in those days the doctor's practice, while never destined to be a large one, was of sufficient proportions to keep the telephone bell constantly jangling.

It was only Clara Bailey Bunting's perennial enthusiasm for her work that made it possible for her to carry on her fragile shoulders the triple duties of wife, mother, and elocution teacher.

As Clara used to say of herself, when she married George Bunting, she had not forfeited her stage career, but had merely postponed it. And George who doted on Clara's recitative talents, agreed that—as soon as the children were of a more self-sufficient age, Clara owed it to herself and to her art to resume her preparation for a career that had been nipped in its very bud by her young romance and subsequent marriage to the good-looking physician.

And of course what subsequently happened was that, as the years drifted, Clara became more and more involved in home ties—the lives of her children and the problems of her husband.

Teaching elocution was about as far as Clara seemed to advance toward her ultimate goal—the theater.

And yet the quality of her enthusiasm remained undoused. When she was thirty, a bit heavier, her blond prettiness a bit paler, her never too robust health a bit frailer, the sweet blue eyes of Clara Bailey Bunting were still fixed resolutely upon the destination of the theater.

There was something undeniably dramatic to Clara Bailey Bunting; with her maturity there came a Lady Macbethian quality to her voice and manner. She deepened, so to speak; took on a new poise, and worked more indefatigably than ever with "her girls," as she called them.

The young girls from the high schools and finishing school of the town came in numbers to study elocution with Clara Bailey Bunting.

It soon became apparent, even to Clara who loved her husband, that he was not destined for success in his work. And yet, because she liked the nobility of the doctor's task, she discouraged her husband's valiant offers to abandon his medical practice for a more lucrative mercantile position, and carried on her own shoulders the upkeep of the little home.

By this time their children, a pair of pretty girl twins, were of an age when they, too, were studying dramatic art with their mother. And how Clara Bailey Bunting worked with these girls! Into them she poured all of her diverted energies.

The doctor doted on these twins, and spent most of his time accompanying them to this and that entertainment. No local charity event, children's festival, or community occasion, was complete without them. Their mother was kept busy by these entertainments, arranging new readings, new dances, new little dialogue scenes for the children.

About this time Clara began to prepare for an enterprise that had long been smoldering in her mind. Together she and the doctor wrote a little one-act skit which was to comprise three characters: Clara and her two daughters. The idea was to carry this skit, when completed, to New York.

That was the year that the doctor developed a spot on his lung.

The next six catastrophic months saw this little family, bewildered by adversity, packing themselves, bag and baggage, for the more benign slopes of southern California.

It was thus out of a volition not her own that Clara Bailey Bunting found herself catapulted into the heart of the new art industry known as the motion picture.

Then and there Clara Bailey Bunting, carrying now the additional load of an invalided husband, took up her cudgels once more. In the front parlor of a tiny California bungalow she sought to gather unto herself a new class of dramatic pupils sufficient to enable her to keep this tiny roof over her family's heads.

After a fashion she succeeded. Young ladies straggled into the parlor of Clara Bailey Bunting for instruction in the gentle art of elocution. The twins grew older, and it was to be Clara's and her invalided husband's joy and delight to behold them when only in their sweet 'teens appearing as "extras" in the local motion picture studios of Hollywood.

By this time Clara herself, forty, paler, leaner, tireder, was now aspiring to character roles. In between her teaching, running the household, catering to the needs of her husband and sewing for her girls, Clara was making hurried visits herself to the studios, registering with the agencies, sending her photographs, made up for roles of her own creation, to various casting directors.

One day the twins, on one of those flukes of good fortune that can occur in the unstable world of the theater, were cast for parts in a picture that featured the predicament of mistaken identity. It was their opportunity. The picture scored a success and the names of Evelyn and Edith Bunting became overnight, as it were, ones to be reckoned with in the world of the cinema.

From this point, the destinies of the Buntings moved forward. Success comes quickly and dramatically in Hollywood. The Buntings found themselves transported from the tiny bungalow to a charming little villa on a rose-grown hillside. The Buntings acquired two cars, a roadster for the girls and a sedan for the doctor, who was unable to travel in an open car. The lean years were apparently over and, for the first time in her married life, Clara Bailey Bunting found herself in a position to concentrate on her own personal ambitions.

By this time the gray was frankly out in her hair and her never too robust shoulders were drooping noticeably. But the doctor's confidence in her was undiminished. Clara in his opinion undoubtedly had the makings of a magnificent character actress.

The girls, full of the sophistication of the studios, and wise with the cruel wisdoms of youth, opposed their mother in her ambitions. The time had come, in their opinion, for her to sit back and enjoy some of the good things of life. They did not subject her to the hurt of it, but between themselves they indulged in some hilarity at her obsession that she was destined for a stage career.

Poor darling. Best to indulge her and let her talk, but just fancy mother, at her age, still carrying on the delusion.

There came a time when even the doctor, who still doted on the mother of his children, came a little sadly to admit to himself what delusion it was.

Sweet dear, her life had gone in service to him and to her children, and yet the vitality of her desires would not die down. Clara was visualizing herself in mother roles by now and character interpretations of old ladies.

And as the demands of her household grew lighter, as the girls were able to supply more and more of the creature comforts, Clara increased her visits to the studios. There were still a few pupils, too, the protestations of her daughters to the contrary notwithstanding.

At fifty, Clara Bailey Bunting, mother of two successful screen actresses herself, held on robustly to her ambitions.

About that time Evelyn married one of the world's most prominent screen stars and for the next five years, because grandchildren came quickly, there was an additional crimp in the professional dreams of Clara Bailey Bunting. It became necessary to take on a larger house, more servants, more domestic mechanisms, and it devolved upon the grandmother to supervise the lives of the three babies of the screen star, Evelyn.

When Clara Bailey Bunting was sixty the white snow of gentle old age was upon her head. And when she walked out now with the doctor, they leaned quite mutually one upon the other.

And yet to the embarrassment, indeed the acute mortification, of her two married daughters and even her husband, Clara still made her visits to the studios.

It became a sore and sensitive point in the family, this attitude of Clara's. Her daughters never referred to it and her husband pretended not to notice the obsession.

But through it all, with her white head high, Clara still referred to her future in dramatic art.

When Clara Bailey Bunting was sixty-one this happened: Seated with about seventy-five "extras" in the outer office of a large motion picture concern, a famous director, hurrying through, paused a moment before her, questioned her brusquely and motioned her into an adjoining office.

Fifteen minutes later, Clara Bailey Bunting was cast for a mother role that was to make her famous the world over. The family of Clara Bailey Bunting is overwhelmed at the overwhelming success that has come to her.

"I told you so," they all argue triumphantly to one another. "I always knew Mother had the makings of a great actress—"

World War Participants

The "allied and associated" nations in the World war were France, Great Britain, Belgium, Italy, the United States, Russia, Serbia, Rumania, Japan, Greece, Portugal, Montenegro, Brazil, China, Cuba, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Siam, San Marino and the Hedjaz (Arabia). On the other side, the central powers, there were Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. The first declaration of war was that of Austria against Serbia on July 28, 1914.

Wheat Gift of the Gods

The ancient Egyptians spoke of Osiris, the Nile god, as having taught the dwellers in the Nile valley the use of the plow. Greek and Roman mythology is full of tales of gods and demigods descending to earth to teach men the use of wheat. The Chinese hold that wheat was the direct gift of heaven, and there is evidence to show that they cultivated this cereal 2,700 years before the beginning of the Christian era.—Northwestern Miller.

POISON
in Your bowels!

Poisons absorbed into the system from souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied constipation for over forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drugstores sell.

Bad Stomach Cause of Bad Skin

You can't expect to have a good clear skin if your stomach is weak and disordered.

Undigested food sends poisons through the body, pimples appear—skin grows sallow and loses color. But these troubles will end quickly and skin clear up if you will start today taking Tanlac.

Tanlac is made from herbs, barks and roots. A tablespoonful before each meal stimulates the digestion naturally so that you can digest what you eat. And when your stomach is in good shape again watch how quickly skin begins to clear up. At your druggist's. Money back if it doesn't help you.

STOMACH WEAK, BLOOD IMPOVERISHED

Faribault, Minn.—"I was in a run-down state of health due to having weak stomach and impoverished blood. My stomach was so weak my food would not digest, I would be distressed, also I broke out with a rash caused by the condition of my blood. I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it relieved me of the weak stomach and built up my blood to a good healthy state. I have never suffered since from weak stomach or impoverished blood."—Louis F. Hoffmann, 711—3rd St. N. W. Druggists.

U. S. Gets Homes For Its Envoys

Official Residences Being Acquired in All Foreign Capitals.

Washington.—The pomp with which America's envoys represent their country abroad today is in marked contrast to conditions around the "turn of the century" when only the rich could take posts in important capitals and the consuls in out of the way places considered themselves lucky to have a roof over their heads.

Records of the State department foreign buildings office show congress has appropriated $6,835,000 for adequate embassies and legations abroad since the $10,000,000 foreign buildings program was authorized in 1926. And congress is being asked this year to set aside another $2,000,000.

When the present program is finished this country will have magnificent embassies in Rio de Janeiro, Santiago, Paris, London, Havana, Tokyo, Mexico City, Istanbul, Rome, Berlin, Buenos Aires, Argentina and Lima. The American flag will float over adequate legations in Tirana, Albania; Peiping, San Jose, Costa Rica; Prague, Oslo, Managua, Nicaragua; San Salvador, El Salvador; Monrovia, Liberia and Ottawa.

Nears Completion.

This program, largely completed already by recent purchases, will be carried out under the $10,000,000 authorization of 1926. But, in the opinion of the State department, buildings are needed in many other capitals. And Chairman Temple of the house foreign affairs committee already has introduced an authorization bill for another $10,000,000 program.

In justifying this vast expenditure, State department officials point out that the growing importance of the United States in world affairs and world trade demands that its foreign homes be commensurate with national pride and dignity. Again, they point to the fact that without government owned homes abroad, only the wealthy can accept diplomatic posts in the larger capitals. This prevents appointments of men without fortunes, however well fitted they may be, and thus tends to destroy democracy in the service.

Pays $100,000 Annually.

When Whitelaw Reid was ambassador to London in the early years of this century, he was forced to pay $100,000 rent annually, from his own pocket, for an embassy. Even had he received the present ambassador's salary of $17,500 per year—which he didn't—he would have had to pay nearly six times that amount for his home alone.

Not only did foreign service officers lack comfortable living places in the old days; they had not even the necessary tools of business. The consulate at Yokohama had no typewriter, no telephone, no postage fund. When mail—a bill of lading, for instance—was sent to an American client, it was dispatched without postage, and the recipient had to pay double if he wanted the letter.

Until recently the American traveler was likely to find his nation represented in small places by the most unexpected persons.

But all this is changing. Within ten or fifteen years, it is expected, this country will be represented throughout the world by pretentious embassies and legations.

Last year a start was made toward providing "representation allowances" for necessary official entertaining to American diplomats, something European nations have done for many decades. The first allowance was small—only $94,000 for 95 diplomatic missions and consulates. But the State department hopes this will be an entering wedge for large allowances.

Princess Says Soviet Amasses Revolt Funds

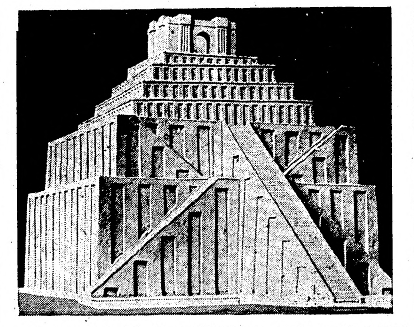
Detroit, Mich.—There are 144 paid Soviet agents in the United States whose sole duty is to encourage communism and prepare for a world revolution against capitalism, Princess Alexandra Kropotkin, former member of the Russian nobility, charged in an address here.

Fifty per cent of the profit from all Soviet foreign trade is used to amass funds for the support of these agents, and $100,000,000 is on deposit in English and German banks for this purpose, she claimed.

Flopping Trout Wrecks Speeding Automobile

Ely, Nev.—The latest fish story is told here by Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Bennett of Ely, of the fish that wrecked their automobile. They were speeding along the highway near a trout rearing pond when a huge trout flopped out of the water under the right wheel of the car. The automobile swerved off the highway, turned over several times, but the occupants were uninjured.

Babylon Tower as It May Have Been



Here is a model of the Tower of Babylon constructed by Prof. Eckhard Unger of Berlin in accordance with the figures obtained from Babylonian cuneiform tablets. It is described as a seven-step "God's Mountain" with a temple on its summit fifteen meters high, which was also used as an astrological observatory.

MILLIONAIRES IN BRITAIN VANISHING, ONLY FEW LEFT

Smaller Incomes and Those Subject to Taxation Are Increasing Rapidly.

London.—Britain's millionaires are thinning out at such a rate that continuance of the present mortality of high incomes for another 20 years would mean that by that time not a man or woman with that much money would remain in the country, writes John Steele in the Chicago Tribune.

The report for 1929-30 of the commissioner of inland revenue brings into graphic relief the situation now as compared with that of only a few years ago. In 1928-29, the last year for which complete figures are available, there were 487 millionaires in England, Scotland, Wales, and northern Ireland.

Just four years before, in 1924-25, there were 601 millionaires recorded in the taxation rolls. For purposes of computation, a millionaire in pounds sterling should have an income of $250,000 a year. On that basis millionaires have disappeared at the rate of 23 per year. The greatest slump was felt in 1927-28, when 48 disappeared from the rolls.

Reaching into higher altitudes of finance, the same tale is told by the commissioner's figures. In 1928-29 there were 130 persons drawing incomes of $500,000 or more annually.

The change is more pronounced as the statistician goes backward. In 1927-28 there were 133 persons receiving more than $500,000 a year and 1926-27 there were 151. On that basis the figure for 1929-30 is 120 odd, or a decline of around 30 in four years.

On the other hand, the smaller incomes of the country are increasing, and incomes subject to taxation for income also are multiplying. Altogether there were 2,250,000 persons chargeable for income tax in 1929-30, or 50,000 more than in the previous year. The gross income "brought under the review of the department" for 1929-30 was the highest since 1922, when the Irish Free State was created.

The income of the country subject to taxation during 1929-30 is placed at $6,775,000,000.

Architects Plan Attack on Ugly Buildings in U. S.

The institute will urge the formation throughout the country of architects' advisory councils to pass upon the quality of buildings before construction begins.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BUNNIES

The bunnies thought they should give a party. So they planned to have a ball which would take place the next night, and they thought they would have it late in the evening so they could dance in the moonlight.

All the next afternoon the little rabbits and even the mother and father rabbits took naps so they would be wide awake and very bright for their party.

At last the magic hour arrived, and Mrs. Molly Cotton Tail received the guests very graciously.

They all wore wraps to the party so as to be stylish.

Mrs. Brown Tail Rabbit wore a very lovely evening coat made of dark pine needles, and Mrs. Jack Rabbit wore a lovely mossy wrap decorated with wild rosebuds.

And they all had fixed very handsome wraps for themselves.

Then the fairies came, wearing all sorts of lovely frocks from the woods, and carrying green wands with new, tiny leaves dangling down from them.

After they had all taken off their wraps, the dancing began. They flitted over the soft green grass, oh so gracefully and lightly.

The Dancing Began.

Every rabbit in the neighborhood had come to the ball, and many had come from quite a distance away.

The ball was given in the beautiful garden belonging to some people who were still away, and the rabbits had invited themselves to visit this garden while the people were far off.

The big lawn was their reception room, and the little lettuce path was their dining room.

And now there appeared at the ball the shadows and the shadow fairies.

All sorts and sizes of shadows arrived. You know shadows love to dance in the moonlight, and when they saw the rabbits dancing around they simply could not resist joining in, too.

The rabbits danced with the shadows, and the shadows danced with the fairies in their beautiful frocks from the woods.

The old Moon grinned and said:

"I love to see a fine ball like this. It's so lovely to have a party out-of-doors where I can see it all.

"So many parties are given in big rooms and I have to peep in through the windows to see the gaiety and fun that is going on, but this is a real ball—one that delights the old Moon."

And the bunnies and the fairies and all the others enjoyed themselves as they hadn't in ages and ages.

It really was a marvelous party and the shadows played pranks and laughed throughout the whole party.

A King and a Page

Betty Snosling was the picture of neatness, although very old-fashioned in her dress.

She was the last of the housemaids who had served King George the Third in his royal palace of Kew, and she delighted to tell of the kindness of the princesses toward her and to show the belongings of the old king.

"Here," said Betty, "is his majesty's walking stick, and there is his backgammon board. That is the harpsichord which once belonged to Handel.

"This is his prayer book. Do you know he had scratched out 'our most religious and gracious king' and written instead 'a miserable sinner'?"

King George was a kind and considerate master to his servants. One day, sitting by himself in the library, he rang the bell for more coal. It was answered by a page, who, on being told what was wanted, rang the bell himself.

When the king asked the reason the youth replied that it was for William, naming an old footman whose duty it was to carry the coal.

Up got the king, calmly and good-naturedly, and desired the page to show him where the coal was kept.

On arriving at the cupboard, the king filled a scuttle, took it to the library, and put coal on the fire.

"There!" said the king, giving the scuttle to the page. "Never ask an older man to do what you are much more able to do yourself."

Scientists Learn More of Volcanic Phenomena

Sitting by the bedside of a volcano and feeling its pulse for 20 years is likely to have its moments of excitement, and Dr. T. A. Jagger, volcanologist at Kilauea, Hawaii, admits that he has had many such moments.

But from this close study of America's most famous crater has come a vast increase in scientific knowledge of seismic action.

Now the United States Interior department is asking for additional funds to carry on the volcanological work in the Hawaii National park, one of the chief features of which is Kilauea.

However, during the last few years the park's nonactive volcanic phenomena, such as gigantic lava tubes, sulphur baths and beds, the flora of the volcanic region, have become as potent drawing cards as the live crater.

So the national park service is expanding its facilities for visitors and campers, besides endeavoring to expand its volcanological observation. Mainland as well as local visitors to the park have rolled up a new record.

EXCESS ACID SICKENS—GET RID OF IT!

Sour stomach, indigestion, gas, usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. Food sours in the stomach.

Correct excess acid with an alkali. The best form of alkali is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It works instantly. The stomach becomes sweet. Your heartburn, gas, headache, biliousness or indigestion has vanished!

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the pleasant way—the efficient way to relieve the effects of over-acidity.

WHEN YOU CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry-on in comfort.

Bayer Aspirin was meant for just such times, because it insures your comfort. Freedom from pains that nag at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block a threatening headache while it's still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you have caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Bayer Aspirin when you travel. Have some at home. It will often "save the day."

From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains, Bayer Aspirin is ready with its quick relief—and it always works. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Any nagging, needless pain.

Get the genuine tablets, stamped with the Bayer cross. Why experiment with imitations costing a few cents less? The saving is too little. There is too much at stake. But there is economy in the purchase of genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

No more COLIC pains ... give Castoria

A CRY in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. When there's need of gentle regulation. Every child loves the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is usually all that's needed to right the irregularities of older, growing children. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. It's prescribed by doctors!

Parcel Shower

A number of friend and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. O. Hamernes gathered at their farm home on Sunday afternoon. The ladies gave Mrs. Hamerness a parcel shower while they were there and, at four o'clock the whole party enjoyed a delicious lunch brought by the visitors.

Gravel Pit Opened

Oscar Schenky of Middle River started here this week to strip the gravel pit on the Ole Reierson farm which the State Highway Department purchased from him a short time ago. The gravel from this pit will be used in oiling the new highway north from here and, according to reports reaching this office, about four thousand yards of gravel will be used for this project here and other pits will be opened at Middle River and Greenbush.

The S. J. Reader company of Minneapolis, graveling contractors who graveled the 30 mile stretch of new highway from here to Greenbush last year, will also do the graveli for the entire oiling job now.

The state highway department will use their own machines and trucks in putting on the oil. This work will commence here just as soon as the weather warms up good so that oil flows freely.

Wool Market Is Stronger

It is mid-season for shearing sheep in Minnesota and although the wool market has not been so encouraging, better conditions are ahead for the industry, says Alex Huddleston, president of the Minnesota Co-operative Wool Growers' association.

Pronounced gains have been recorded by the industry during the past few months, Mr. Huddleston informs Minnesota Farm Bureau officials. Consumption of raw wool by New England mills shows a gain of twenty per cent in Fubruary over the preceding month and some have been operating on night schedules in order to take care of rush orders for immediate delivery. Reflecting the sharp advance in the foreign wool markets, domestic prices have shows a better undertone. On the whole, wool is in a relatively stronger position as compared with many other raw commodities, it is said, but much higher prices cannot be expected until general business has shown considerable improvement

The Minnesota Wool Growers' association, a Farm Bureau setup, is affiliated with the National Wool Marketing Corporation in Boston, formed under supervision of the Federal Farm Board as a central sales agency for the various state and regional cooperatives throughout the country.

The wool pool is making an initial payment of 13 or 14 cents per pound and each pooler will receive another payment after the wool is sold, Mr. Huddleston says.

This is the second season for wool marketing in the state under the Federal Farm Board plan. As to results of the first season C. D. Danman, board member says, "Wool was more stable in price than any other major agricultural commodity and because growers had their own marketing agency they received several cents a pound more for their product than they would have otherwise."

School Notes

High School

Ruth Saastad, Frank Cavere, and Helen Monson were absent from school this week.

The Sophomores have finished their Biology books and have started reviewing.

The boys had a game of baseball with Greenbush Friday, May 1st. The score was 6-5 in favor of Holt. Reuben Carlson broke his leg in this game. We all feel sorry for him.

Monday, May 4th, a game was played with St. Hilaire, the score being 7-7.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The 7th and 8th graders are making carnations for Mother's Day.

Raymond Higgins and Ruth Engebretson were absent from on Tuesday.

The 7th grade have been reviewing their poems learned this year in Grammar.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

We are going to have a reading contest Friday morning. The two best readers from each grade are going to be chosen. Miss Ahlsten is to be the judge.

Alice Bottem had the misfortune of knocking out one of her front teeth on Monday.

First and Second Grades

Helen Wahlen was the first one in our room to find a bouquet of violets.

Betty Lou brought a lovely primrose to our room this week. We all enjoyed it very much. Harriet Wahlin brought a bouquet of lady slippers.

Now we have a lovely display of flowers, with the pretty ones that have been brought before.

We first graders started another reader this week.

We second graders are trying our skill at a third grade reader and are doing find in that book.

Farm Buildings Burned

The entire set of farm buildings on the old Hanson-Barzen farm northeast of town burned to the ground the other day. It is a crime to see the way some fellows set fire and then don't give a snap where it goes or how much damage it does. It was not so much to the buildings on this place but, the spruce grove planted there thirty years ago which served as a landmark and improvement to the place was totaly destroyed.

This was the fourth place on which buildings have burned from grass fires this spring.

N. S. A. News

The Northwest Experiment Station is prepared to test a limited nnmber of flax seed plots this summer to determine whether they are wilt resistant. If readers of the News have a supply of seed that has not been recently certified and that may have become mixed with non-resistant strains, one pound samples may be sent to the station for testing during the summer.

A plot of land has been thoroly inoculated with wilt. Seed samples will be planted on this wilt-sick soil; notes on the amount of wilt developing will be taken, and a report made at the close of the season. Samples should be addressed to the Agronomy Department, Northwest School, Crookston. No charge will be made for this service.

Reuben Carlson Fractures Leg

Reuben Carlson, the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson had hard luck while playing baseball here last Friday afternoon. Reuben, who is a freshman in the local highschool was playing second baseman on the local highschool team in a real tight game againt Greenbush when the accident happened.

It all happened when one of the big Greenbush boys forgot to use baseball sportmanship in getting onto second base and just jumped onto Reuben knocking him down and breaking the bones in one of his legs close to the ankle joint. He was taken to a hospital at Thief River Falls where he had the break set and he is now wearing a cast.

According to reports from the hospital he will be home again this week. He will however, miss the rest of the school term but, he had high marks in his subjects and will pass on to the second year of highschool.

German "Big Sisters" Meet Again

Three "big sisters," born in Germany, as they met for the first time in years at the docks at Southampton, England. On the left is the Berengaria which was the Imperator. Directly behind her is the S. S. Majestic, which was the Bismarck, while on the right is the S. S. Leviathan, which was formerly the Vaterland.

Historic Tree Is Given to England

'Grandchild' of Washington Elm to Be Planted at Sulgrave Manor.

Washington.—Registered on the national honor roll of the American Tree association, a "grandchild" of the famous Cambridge elm, under which George Washington took command of the American army in 1775, has been shipped to Sulgrave Manor house in England. This is the first tree registered to be planted on foreign soil and, standing as it will at Sulgrave manor, it will typify the friendship between the two nations.

The American Tree association is registering thousands of tree planters who are marking the bicentennial in 1932 of the birth of George Washington by planting trees. The memorial plan has been taken up by patriotic organizations, the Masonic fraternity, of which Washington was a member, civic associations, the women's clubs, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, and thousands of schools.

Washington Ancestral Home.

This "grandchild" of the famous elm is nearly eight feet tall, and will be presented to the Sulgrave Manor board through Viscount Lee of Fareham, the chairman of the board for planting at the ancestral home of the Washington family at Sulgrave near Banbury, Oxon, England. The tree is the gift of Mrs. James H. Dorsey of the Baltimore chapter of the Maryland Daughters of the American Revolution. With the tree goes a bronze marker, giving the history of the Cambridge elm.

Charles Lathrop Pack of the American Tree association has also sent with it a certificate of registration in the American Tree association, made out to the Sulgrave Manor board. This has been sent to Viscount Lee along withan American flag to stand beside the tree.

At the presentation, when the tree is planted, Mrs. Gillespie, the regent of the Walter Hines Page chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution in London, will represent Mrs. Dorsey and the Maryland D. A. R. At the planting a box of soil from Annapolis, where Washington resigned his commission as commander-in-chief of the army, will be used. Thus the beginning and the end of his generalship will be recorded at the ancestral home.

This "grandchild" of the Cambridge elm has a very interesting history. It grew from seeds scooped up in box by a relative of Mrs. Dorsey some 25 years ago. Two children of the tree are at Mount Vernon, and another is at Annapolis.

Mrs. Dorsey has grown other trees from these seeds, and two of the grandchildren are to have a place of honor on the Mount Vernon boulevard which is to be opened between the Capitol of the nation and Mount Vernon. A cablegram just received by Mrs. Dorsey from Viscount Lee said that his board had accepted the gift with great delight, and that the planting of the tree would be a great occasion in the history of the board. Another grandchild of the Cambridge elm has been planted at the headquarters of the American Tree association on Sixteenth street, and will be marked exactly like the tree being sent to Sulgrave manor.

Due to traffic demands and old age, the original Cambridge elm has disappeared and a bronze marker in the pavement marks the spot where Washington took command of the army on July 3, 1775.

Youth Blinds Shark When It Attacks Him

Brisbane.—Sharks aren't so much, according to Stanley Roser, eighteen, who recently staged a quiet bout with one of the man-eating fish. While swimming the shark attacked him, sweeping up from beneath with a furious rush. Just as the shark closed on him, Roser extended one of his fingers and pushed it directly into the shark's eye, ending the struggle.

Washington Crime Wave Is Girl and Cap Pistol

Washington.—The capital's most recent crime wave has been abruptly terminated and June Fiddelsop, the gun girl who terrorized taxi drivers, sent pedestrians scurrying into doorways and had a perfectly beautiful time, has been disarmed and sent sobbing to bed.

June, who was sixteen recently, went out for a stroll and found a pistol. She picked it up and strolled on down the street, banging away aimlessly.

Half a dozen or so riot squads surrounded June and her pistol. They discovered it was a cap pistol. June was sent home.

NEW YORK'S "RADIO CITY" MINIATURE "FUTURE CITY"

Sacrifice Air and Street Rights Worth Millions for Spaciousness and Light.

New York.—New York's busiest midtown zone will soon be the scene of the greatest adventure in city rebuilding ever attempted in America. Three great rectangular blocks, the equivalent in area of eight or ten ordinary city blocks, are now being cleared, and on this plot will rise the $250,000,000 "Radio City," a monumental group of ten buildings designed to be the future entertainment capital of the nation.

Due to the extent of the operation, the builders will, for the first time, have the opportunity to plan the proper spacing of buildings and streets so as to provide maximum light, air and convenience of traffic, the American Architect points out. The result will give the nation of today a miniature preview of the city of 50 years hence.

The project, backed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and the radio interests, will include three great theaters for opera, dramatic and musical productions, and sound motion pictures, with provisions made in the latter for presenting television reproductions of different events when television is sufficiently developed to permit of its commercial application.

Twenty-seven radio and television studios, ranging from theater size to intimate rooms, will be incorporated in a single building. The most interesting building from a visual point, however, will be oval in shape and 15 stories in height, facing Fifth avenue in the heart of its smartest shopping zone. The tallest building of the group will rise 68 stories in the rear center of the plot and will be flanked by two other towers of fifty-odd floors.

The allowance for light, air and spaciousness—an important factor usually ignored through necessity in smaller building operations—is very interesting to city planners. Two of the buildings facing Fifth avenue will rise only eight stories. These will flank the oval building of 15 stories, thus providing a wide open vista from the taller buildings behind. The two streets now running through the plot will be widened to provide additional spaciousness, and a new street running north and south will be cut through the center of the three blocks. In the heart of the center block will be a spacious and ornamental plaza.

An underground shopping center will take in the entire area at a level 17 feet below the street, while below this will be an extensive underground parking space which also will provide entrances to each building for freight deliveries.

"THE LONG ARM"

By FANNIE HURST

THE long arm of coincidence pokes its way into human destinies and does strange things. There is something always a little unconvincing about a story based on the uncertain sands of coincidence, yet life is filled on all sides with striking examples of such circumstances.

Coincidence undoubtedly played a major role in the lives and destinies of old Colonel Harbor, his son Raymond and a lively young woman named Shirley Lang.

When Shirley was twenty-two, married to a young engineer named Robert Lang, and living with him in a small city in Pennsylvania, she took a short trip to a nearby resort known as Brown's Glen, there to recuperate from a stubborn attack of influenza that had laid her low. It was only fifty miles from her home, so her husband ran down to spend the first week-end with her, and appeared there the second week-end to take her home.

They were a quiet pair of weeks and attuned to Shirley's mood which was one of relaxation and a sense of slowly gathering strength in the period of her recuperation.

Even before her marriage Shirley had shown a predilection for the company of old people. She liked them. She was an intelligent, level-headed girl, and the wisdom and repose and mellow experiences of older people interested her. At parties she could usually be found talking to the mothers and grandmothers of her own generation. This characteristic endeared Shirley to people. Both young and old admired her for it.

It was therefore true to form that on her visit to Brown's Glen Shirley Lang should meet and become interested in the gentle and sagacious personality of old Colonel Harbor. He was not really a colonel. The title had fallen on him because of the fine white-haired dignity of his bearing. He was a retired business man from Ithaca, and was also at Brown's Glen for the benign purpose of regaining his strength after an illness.

Like most old people, he took an immediate fancy to Shirley Lang. She did not treat him with the usual kind of deference that ground into his consciousness the fact that age had shunted him to life's sidelines. Shirley Lang met older people with deference and yet without the broad kind of reverence that makes youth so often self-conscious in its treatment of old age. To Shirley, Colonel Harbor was a mellow, interesting, witty old gentleman with funds of experiences growing out of a full lifetime, and a wisdom that comes with intelligent maturity.

They became great friends. They sat together on the sunny edge of the veranda, walked through the quiet old park surrounding the hotel, took motor excursions together and in the evening played cribbage or gathered a foursome for bridge. A real friendship sprang up between these two.

When Shirley's husband came down week-ends, she showed him off proudly to the old gentleman and he in turn never tired of taking her into the confidence of his own story. The story of the wife who had died serving him was one that Shirley asked to hear again and again. There was one son, a young business man of about thirty-two who had married a few months before. His choice had been a bit staggering to the old colonel at first. The girl had been a dancer in a musical revue. But he reconciled himself by now, and sometimes showed Shirley the quaint, fullsome, sagacious letters he had written to his son and daughter-in-law.

It was with real regret that the old colonel and young Shirley saw the placid weeks at Brown's Glen come to an end. With the true spirit of the travelers of all times and all places, they exchanged vows to continue the relationship, to keep alive the friendship, and to correspond.

Unfortunately, these well-meant intentions were never to be carried out beyond the two weeks following the visit of the new-made friends to Brown's Glen. True to their promise, one letter was exchanged between them immediately after their return to their respective homes. When no reply came to her second, Shirley, after a wait of a considerable interval, wrote a timid postcard reminding the old gentleman of his promise. A reply came in a short note from a woman who signed herself Deborah Harbor, sister of the colonel. The old gentleman had died in his sleep, two weeks after his return home from Brown's Glen.

So much for the rather wistful little incident of this friendship between an old gentleman and a young girl which had taken place during a pair of weeks in a quiet old country spot among the foothills of Pennsylvania.

The long arm of coincidence, its moving finger seeming to write, now swings through time and space.

Ten years later, a trim, capable, alert-eyed woman in her early thirties is seated in a restaurant in a busy business section of New York city, lunching with another alert young woman of her same type. They are obviously business women. One of them is Shirley Lang, widow for five years and now buyer for the misses' ready-to-wear department of one of the largest department stores of New York. She has matured, but in a rather self-sufficient, slim way that characterizes the development of the modern girl. She is a little older, but no heavier. She is a little sadder, but no less clever. She is a great deal wiser.

Life for Shirley has been a quick panorama since those days which she spent in recuperation at Brown's Glen. Her marriage, which threatened, toward the end, to turn into disappointment, was abruptly spared what might have been disruption by the sudden death of her husband in a motor accident, when his hand at the wheel was the unsteady one of intoxication. Quick emotional, economic and social changes had resulted. Almost overnight, as it were, Shirley Lang had found herself out in the world. She had made good. The woman in the smart restaurant was a chic, up-to-date one. There was about her the sureness that goes with success, the calm deliberation of the executive, the rather cold demeanor of the woman who has learned to hold her own in a vast and complicated world.

Two tables removed, a youngish man, dining with one considerably older, forces, with a reiteration that is annoying, his bold dark glance against the eyes of Shirley Lang. It is an insinuating glance, a speculating glance; one of inquiry, not to say impertinence.

Shirley Lang, whose experience along these lines has been a long and bitter one, meets his eyes with a cold glitter in her own. She is annoyed, even a little disgusted. She points out the man, with an excoriating remark, to her companion. Her luncheon guest, also a buyer in a large department store, recognizes him as the new general manager.

Her annoyance is so apparent that the young man, laughingly invited by a nod from Shirley's companion, crosses over in the mood of apology.

He is frank and a little boyish about it. Yes, he had been boldly and unshamedly angling for the eye of Shirley Lang. It might sound absurd and juvenile to admit it, but it had been so long, five years, in fact, since he had felt the slightest flutter of interest in the flutter of a woman's eye, that the emotion was one that got the better of him. It had been five years since his divorce. He had been gathering himself together since.

It was all so simple. Of course, according to the writing finger of the long arm of coincidence, the man was Raymond Harbor. He had heard of Shirley in those two weeks before his father's death. He even had her letter and postcard to the old gentleman tucked away in his packet of precious mementos.

The wooing and the mating of Shirley and Raymond is not the point of this story.

The long, long arm is!

So much for the pattern of the situation. Scarcely the one to catch up the thread of these two lives into the same fabric. An old colonel at peace in his grave might have chuckled at the weaving fingers of time. In more ways than one it might have gratified the old eyes, long since asleep, to see the eyes of these two, Shirley and Raymond, discover each other across a flock of conventional restaurant tables, lighten, brighten, flash!

A pair of lives had drifted together in much the fashion that most human beings find out their mates, and yet the fact that Shirley had known the father of Raymond, back in the days when an old man delighted in her youth, makes the meeting seem a little unreal.

Just any two, glancing, quickening, uniting after a glance or two in a public place, is romance. Shirley and Raymond, glancing, quickening, uniting after a glance or two in a public place, is coincidence.

But in any event, none of these considerations were to mar the meeting. It all came about quickly, rightly, and with the irrepressible velocity of a gale. There was never hesitancy in the capitulation of Raymond. With a waryness more characteristic of her sex, Shirley fenced a bit. After all, one didn't fall in love over a demi tasse. Not if you were thirty and had tasted the dregs of a bitter experience. But that was only Shirley pretending with herself. She did fall in love over a demi tasse.

But the wooing and mating of Shirley and Raymond is not the point of this story.

The long, long arm is!

Soberness

Soberness is prescribed for all sorts of persons in the New Testament. It is insisted that old men and women must be sober, that young men and women must be taught to be sober, and the young men are exhorted to sobermindedness—perhaps for the reason that in the nature of the case they were more strongly tempted to go wrong in that matter than others. It is a comprehensive word, worthy of the special study of the classes mentioned—the old folk and the young folk.—Bishop P. Fitzgerald.

WHEN YOU FEEL LOW

Bayer-Tablets Aspirin Genuine

A headache is often the sign of fatigue. When temples throb it is time to rest. If you can't stop work, you can stop the pain. Bayer Aspirin will do it, every time. Take two or three tablets, a swallow of water, and carry-on—in comfort.

Don't work with nerves on edge or try all day to forget a nagging pain that aspirin could end in a jiffy. Genuine aspirin can't harm you; just be sure it's Bayer.

In every package of Bayer Aspirin are proven directions for headaches, colds, sore throat, neuralgia, neuritis, etc. Carry these tablets with you, and be prepared.

And no modern girl needs "time out" for the time of month! Bayer Aspirin is an absolute antidote for periodic pain.

Take Bayer Aspirin for any ache or pain, and take enough to end it. It can't depress the heart. That is medical opinion. That is why it is only sensible to insist on the genuine tablets that bear the Bayer cross.

INDIGESTION GOES—QUICKLY, PLEASANTLY

When you suffer from heartburn, gas or indigestion, it's usually too much acid in your stomach. The quickest way to stop your trouble is with Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. A spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids—instantly. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

Try Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, and you will never allow yourself to suffer from over-acidity again. It is the standard anti-acid with doctors. Your drugstore has Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, with directions for use, in generous 25c and 50c bottles.

How Much?

Thirteen-year-old Robert D., of Franklin, was greatly excited over learning to drive an automobile. Grandmother was trying to dissuade him by telling him he could not get a license. His mother, in the meantime, was telling him of the ambition of young people thirty years ago to own a fine horse and buggy, when Robert said:

"Mother, how much did a horse and buggy license cost?"—Indianapolis News.

Children need not steal your health

There should be no health penalty attached to motherhood. There isn't among really healthy women. Expectant mothers who think of the baby's health as well as their own, should take a good vegetable tonic to protect the two lives—Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. All dealers.

Unique Record

Thomas Smith, of Syracuse, N. Y., who worked for a railroad six days a week, not missing a day for thirty years, yet never rode on a train, has been retired with his name inscribed on the honor roll of the line. Smith's job was to sweep and tidy up the seventeen locomotive stalls in a roundhouse. Except for lifts on cars shunting around the yard, Smith never traveled by rail.

Eat Everything without Fear of Indigestion

Are there lots of foods you can't eat—for fear of gas, bloating, pains in the stomach and bowels?

Do you have to pass up favorite dishes—while the rest enjoy them?

That's a sign you need Tanlac! For more than 10 years Tanlac has restored to vigorous health thousands who suffered like you do.

Mrs. Arvena Bowers, of 1230 Jackson St., Topeka, Kans., says: "Five years I was troubled with gas, bloating and dizzy spells. But Tanlac toned up my whole system and increased my weight 10 lbs."

If you suffer from indigestion, gas, dizziness, headaches, or torpid liver—try Tanlac. One bottle often brings the needed relief.

Tanlac is a good, pure medicine, made of roots, barks, and herbs. Get it from your druggist today. Your money back if it doesn't help you.

His Lucky Day

G. T. Robertson, a truck driver living near Roanoke, Va., noticed an ordinary match box lying in the underbrush while hauling cord wood. He saw the box as he passed each day. Finally, having motor touble at this spot and wanting a match to clean the carburetor, he picked up the box. It contained $21 in bills.

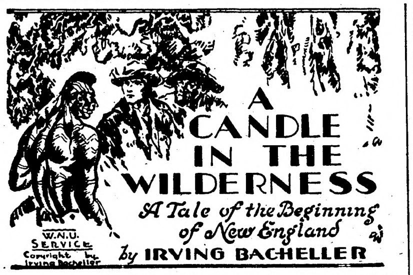
Carolina Woman Lost 47 Lbs. In 3 Months and Feels Years Younger

"I have been taking Kruschen Salts for nearly 8 months. I have continued taking one teaspoonful in warm water every morning. I then weighed 217 pounds, was always bothered with pains in my back and lower part of abdomen and sides.

"Now I am glad to say I am a well woman, feel much stronger, years younger and my weight is 170 pounds. I do not only feel better but I look better, so all my friends say.

"I shall never be without Kruschen Salts, will never cease taking my daily dose and more than glad to highly recommend it for the great good that is in it." Mrs. S. A. Solomon, New Bern, N. C., Jan. 1930. "P. S. You may think I am exaggerating by writing such a long letter but truly I feel so indebted to you for putting out such wonderful salts that I cannot say enough."

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts 4 weeks costs but 85 cents at druggists the world over. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast. Attention to diet will help—cut out pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—the Kruschen way is the safe way to lose fat. Try one bottle and if not joyfully satisfied—money back.—Adv.



A CANDLE IN THE WILDERNESS

A Tale of the Beginning of New England

by IRVING BACHELLER

THE STORY

Robert Heathers and William Heydon, to escape secular and religious tyranny, leave England in 1634 for the New world.

They had been more than sixty days at sea when they came into a breathless calm. The captain was worried as night fell. He said that he saw in the darkness a strange light resting for a moment on the mast. He was watching for it to reappear. It was a bad sign, he said, if it came not again. The passengers could hear distant thunder and a strange roaring beyond the horizon in the southwest. Then they were driven under hatches—all save Will Heydon, a favorite of the captain. The young man had begged for the privilege of staying in the weather to lend a hand in case of need. By midnight the ship lay at hull in a mighty wind. A mast was cut down. Before daylight the waves had beat off the roundhouse. He who cund the ship had to be lashed to his place for fear of washing away. When the storm passed, the Handmaid was so foundered in the sea that none thought she could rise again. The frantic bellowing of the cattle which had been a part of the tumult had ceased. They were dead.

The sea was going down. All able-bodied men were summoned to the pumps. Three days and nights they were lifting water while the carpenters were making repairs. Soon the ship began to rise. Then all heard how William Heydon, lashed to the stern stays when a great wave swept the deck, had seized the captain's waist and kept him from going overboard. A fair wind favored them. They spread what sails they could carry. The wind quickened to a gale and sped them landward. In two more weeks on a flood-tide they swung into Portsmouth harbor. It was a warm bright day. The land odors and the look of the shore filled the adventurers with a great joy. They were all on deck. Many, having lost their clothes in the storm, were ragged and half clad. "Cap'n John," as he was familiarly called, addressed them briefly as follows:

"The savages say o' the whites that they are the people who talk with God. I reckon that you know why we do it. If you didn't have it before you're likely to get the habit comin' over. When it's the toss of a penny between port and a sea grave nobody is careless in choosin' between God and the devil. In fact they're apt to be careful a long time after that has happened. Now let us all bow our heads and do a little private talkin'."

It seemed as if all the good people of Portsmouth were crowded about the landing, with furs, seashells, fish, Indian arrows and other merchandise, crying their wares.

Next day the young men and some others took water for Boston in a shallop with all their goods.

Boston was a lusty young village of more than a hundred houses in a scatter of green trees. There were two hills next to the sea. Some of the smaller houses were built of tree trunks with the bark on them. Some of frames covered with clapboards with breakneck roofs in the rear. A few were built of brick and stone and roofed with slate or planks. On well-ordered, comely streets, were a mill, a smithy, a fish market, an inn and a number of stores, trading mainly in furs, clothing, linen, hardware, wampum and fishing gear. Robert and William went to the inn and, after a day of looking about, to the house of Rev. John Cotton, whose hands had touched their heads in blessing when he was the vicar of St. Botolph's—a magnificent church of that parish, by common report, the greatest in England. They were familiar with the thrilling story of his escape in disguise from the high commission of the king and his violent, pestering Bishop Laud. He was a graduate of Trinity college, a fellow and dean of Emmanuel's college, where these boys had spent a year and had hoped to spend other years. From this rich, learned and sumptuous environment Cotton had come to the crude, rough-wood meeting house on the edge of a vast wilderness as the teacher of the people of New Boston—mostly unschooled but serious-minded.

He received the young men with a warm heart and the clerical fashion of speech.

"Welcome, my boys! You are as those come to another planet. Youth and strength and courage backed with the good English blood are needed here. I have heard of your frightful voyage and of a fine brave thing Heydon did."

The young man was quick to answer: "I am sorry. I do not want a reputation to live up to that is on so poor a footing. Let me be known only as one who hates oppression and who has come here to be rid of it, and to help build up a better England."

The great man put his hand on the boy's shoulder, saying: "Your talk is like a breath from the beloved fenlands. One knows what to expect from a well-bred Englishman. You will hear much talk of another kind. Roundabout us are many lewd and common folk. We have a hard time to keep those outside the church within bounds and certain of those in the fold toward and orderly. Satan is as crafty here as ever he was in the garden of old. Often you will be shocked but you will be happy and, in the good days coming, prosperous. I should like to see you bound in wedlock to this new world and stayed among the founders of a great commonwealth."

With a smile Robert answered: "Our mothers advise us not to marry here."

The doctor rejoined: "I have all deep respect for the good English mothers, but they speak with little knowledge of America. A great, free,

"Our Mothers Advise Us Not to Marry Here."

God-fearing people are growing up here and one can do no better thing for England than give his strength to them. It should be done with no reservations. You have small comfort standing with a foot in England and the other in America. I would rather see you marry and become flesh of our flesh. Here man may not practice or submit to beguilements far too common in the world behind us. A man and a woman are now under sentence of death for adultery. It is my duty to make you to know of these new English rigidities. I am acquainted with lusty youth and its perils. Not long will you be happy or contented in this land unless duly married. We have girls with every grace of mind and person. Come and dine with us tomorrow and you shall know that my eyes do not deceive me. Moreover you shall meet men who can advise in the business you have in mind and perhaps give needed furtherance."

They were glad to accept this offer of hospitality from the kindly doctor. As they were leaving he directed them to an agent of the colony from whom they bought, subject to the court's approval, a few acres near the home of their friend. Forthwith they agreed upon plans for the immediate building and furnishing of a house. The agent introduced them to an interesting, friendly man—heavily bearded and a little beyond middle age—of the name of Amos Todkill.

"This is a man of great and diverse adventures," said the agent. "He fought with Capt. John Smith in Pannonia and helped him to make a map of this promontory when the wilderness touched the water. He is the famous story teller of Massachusetts bay. He knows the savages as no living white man knows them."

Todkill was a sinewy, broad-shouldered, ruddy man of medium height and keen blue eyes. His blond hair and beard were streaked with gray. His quick movements and rapid talk, his prodigious hands and arms betrayed the lion-like vitality and energy wrapped in his red skin. He pointed out the houses on the hills behind and characterized the men and women who lived in them as follows:

"America is partly rocks: I reckon they helped to hold the world down a pretty time while it were young and in the green years. They have winds here that would blow the top off o' hell. We need weight in the houses to hold 'em down.

"There's John Endicott! A big iron cannon loaded with hard opinions! He is sure that God agrees with him.

"There's Winthrop. He's a lever among iron men. He can move 'em—a gallant, good man! Rich, learnt! Lives in that long house yonder.

"Thomas Dudley, the governor, lives next to Winthrop. Blue-blooded! Agent and kin o' the duke o' Northumberland and Sir Philip Sidney! Iron man! Guts o' brass! Hates light stuff. Beware o' light carriage and light words when he's lookin'. I reckon he thinks that God is a Dudley and as easy insulted. But hold up yer hearts. It's a buxom land. I want to take ye to a wit and a scholar. Knew Will Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. He's 'the hermit o' the promontory.'"

He hired a birch-bark canoe and paddled the young men across a cove to the little hut of Henry Blaxton—a tall, lank, swarthy, hospitable Englishman who loved to smoke and recall his memories to men of understanding. He was near sixty years of age. In deerskin half-boots and rough sad cloth he was still a gentleman—one of those restless sons of the old sod who have seen much of the world and can be content with his own company. His head and beard were well trimmed. The cheerful friend of John Smith was smiling. There was a twinkle in the gray eyes of the hermit when, after welcoming his guests, he shook the ashes out of his pipe and said:

"Todkill, you have the judgment of a malt horse or you would not be bringing your friends to meet a half-decayed, worm-eaten gentleman. I have a great fear of woodpeckers."

"Well, if we light on you we shall do no peckin'," Todkill answered.

"Sit down and loose your tongues. I'll be a whetstone for your wit."

Todkill turned to the young men and said: "Here's a whale who needs deeper water to play in than my gab affords. Once one o' King James' men playin' at the Globe."

Then the hermit spoke: "And now playing with many ghosts in a comedy called Solitude. This is my kingdom. I am the king, the court, the church and the parliament. The dog and the cat are my people. We have no disagreements. The other players enter. Real folk, as now, or ghosts out of my memory. My friend Will Shakespeare comes in with a merry jest and sits down with me as he was wont to do of old. Big Ben Jonson blusters on with one of his old tales of the town, full of intrigue and youthful deviltry, adding at the end 'If it be not so I'll eat my spur leathers.'"

"These boys were eager to meet you," said Todkill.

Blaxton remarked with a bow and a smile: "I will now hear their lines. I hope that they are of 'sober and peaceable conversation.'"

They recognized this phrase from one of the laws of the general court, which Doctor Cotton had read to them.

"Are you a member of the church?" young Heydon asked.

"No, I am old and I live in the skies. The Lord's brethren are like the Lord's bishops, but the brethren are better men," Blaxton answered. "I hate their tyranny as a Jew hates hog's flesh. Still when I think of these stern men I set my wisdom at work. The shores swarm with mere adventurers who expect to find rocks of pure gold. Some are careless, improvident, merry time-killers. Their receding backs were a joy and relief to their friends in England. Some are visionaries content with nothing but war and loot and a liberty that kills itself. Some are bull beef, ready to go as they are driven. None of these louts care a straw for law and order. They would be glad to see them put away. These evil, lax and thoughtless men outnumber the church folk. But remember the church makes the only law we have and maintains a respect for it. Weakness would open the way to chaos and anarchy. The magistrates are sturdy old Englishmen struggling with the ancient law of dead and moldering ages to bend it to their common sense."

Bellamy Foresaw Radio in "Musical Telephone"

Edward Bellamy's "musical telephone," as described in "Looking Backward—2000-1887," strongly suggested present-day radio programs with some additional wrinkles.

"Doctor Leete," he related, "accompanied me to my room when I retired to instruct me as to the adjustment of the musical telephone. He showed me how by turning a screw the volume of music could be made to fill the room or die away to an echo so faint and far that one could scarcely be sure whether he heard or imagined it. If of two persons side by side one desired to listen to music and the other to sleep, it could be made audible to one and inaudible to the other. He explained that by a clockwork combination a person could arrange to be awakened at any hour by music."

On Sunday he heard a sermon transmitted from an "acoustically prepared chamber." "The voice of a man at the pitch of ordinary conversation addressed us with an effect of proceeding from an invisible person in the room."—Kansas City Times.

A tomb standing in the city of Saba, Persia, is pointed out as the tomb of the three wise men who visited the infant Christ. There are, however, no historical data authenticating this statement.

Quick COMFORT for fretful upset children

ALL children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely; good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.

Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give it to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown!

For sale by all druggists. Be sure to get the genuine product with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper, and this familiar name-plate:

Scientists Find Bones of Prehistorc Beasts

Important discoveries of the skeletons of prehistoric animals have been made in Ecuador by the scientists of the American Museum of Natural History.

Excavation was carried on in the deep ravines of Chalan, in the province of Chimborazo, and in Alangosi, in the valley of Chillos, where the scientists have been working since the middle of December. Skeletons found at Chalan were of the glacial period and those at Alongosi of the post-glacial period.

The bones of the glacial period are said by the scientists to be from twenty-five thousand to thirty thousand years old. Skeletons complete, or in part were found there of a mastodon, a camel, a horse, various species of deer and rodents.

"The finding of skeletons of horses and camels, which to many laymen may seem an anomaly," says a report, "proves again the theory sustained by well-informed paleontologists that these animals originated in America and migrated to Europe and Africa in a remote epoch with others such as the elephant, a skeleton of which, as well as of prehistoric horses, was found recently in North America."

Bible Remains "Best Seller"

According to a survey made in 1930, there were sold in the year 1929 throughout the world approximately 36,500,000 Bibles or parts of Bibles. The American Bible society in this year sold 11,102,664 Bibles or parts of Bibles. The cheaper editions predominated and single Psalms are the greatest sellers. Operating from 1816, the American Bible society has sold 216,193,915 Bibles or parts of Bibles.

Grapefruit Plentiful

OWING to a big crop of Florida grapefruit this year, there has been a sharp decline in the price of fresh fruit. An abundance of excellent canned grapefruit will also be available this year at reasonable prices for the same reason.

One grapefruit grower whose orchards are close to the Gulf claims that the salt breezes put that certain tang into the flavor of the fruit which makes it distinctive. The canned product retains this tang and also the wealth of mineral and vitamin content that is in grapefruit, because it is sun-ripened, picked and packed when fully mature.

New Tested Recipes

Here is a formula for a delicious Sunday morning cocktail, quickly prepared with canned grapefruit juice; and another for an excellent dinner salad which is gay in color:

Prune and Grapefruit Cocktail: Cut prunes from their pits and stew. Use one cup of stewed prune pulp and add the contents of a No. 2 can of grapefruit hearts and one-half cup of orange pulp and juice. Add four tablespoons of confectioner's sugar, if you prefer a sweet cocktail. This serves eight persons.

Grapefruit and Grape Salad: Drain and chill one No. 2 can of grapefruit and one cup of seeded white grapes. Make a French dressing, using grapefruit juice instead of vinegar. Arrange the fruit on lettuce hearts and pour over the dressing. Garnish each salad with strips of pimiento and a ring of green pepper. This serves eight persons.*

Better Breakfasts

DO you plan your breakfast with as much interest as you plan your dinner? Or do you just reach mechanically for the coffee pot and toaster? It is true that breakfasts must often be hastily prepared, since most of us like to sleep as long as possible, but if a few minutes on the day before are devoted to planning the menu, and a few more minutes at dinner-time given to baking the hot breads for breakfast, it is a simple matter to consult your menu, heat your muffins or what-not, and quickly toss together the other good things that make up a breakfast.

Start the Day Right

And what a difference it makes in one's day! A tart, juicy fruit, a creamy cereal, a foamy omelet and crisp bacon, piping hot muffins and a sweet—these things start the whole family on tip-toe ready for the rush of the day's events.

How do these suggestions appeal to you for a September morn?

Chilled Cherries
Cooked Whole Wheat Cereal and Cream
Shirred Eggs Grilled Bacon
Pineapple Muffins Honey
Coffee

Pineapple Muffins: Sift together two cups of flour, three tablespoons of sugar, four teaspoons of baking powder, one-half teaspoon of salt. Add two well-beaten eggs and one cup of milk. Add three tablespoons of melted butter and three-fourths cup of crushed pineapple which has been well-drained (you might reserve the syrup for a chilled fruit soup or a fruit cocktail). Bake in greased muffin tins in a hot oven—400 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes.*

Word was received here this week that Gilbert Johnson of Warren was in a hospital there and very low with pneumonia. Hio parents, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson were called down there to see him Tuesday evening.

A number of important short courses and special meeting will be held at the Northwest School and Experiment Station, Crookston, during the summer months. June 8-11 the annual Junior Short Course will be held under the supervision of H. A. Pflughoeft, District Boys' and Girls' Club leader. Last year there were over 400 boys and girls from thirteen Northwestern Minnesota counties in attendance, This will be followed by the annual Women's Camp, which is scheduled for June 15 18. One hundred fifty women are expected to attend this short course and take part in the many lectures and demonstrations dealing with problems of the home.

The annual Livestack Feeders' Day will also be held in June with the Crops and Soils Day scheduled for July.

The first rain of the season fell here on Monday afternoon turning to snow by Tuesday morning and kept up a light flurry that day. With the way the weather looks as we go to press, there is prospects for more rain. The rain and snow we got sure was fine for the crops that are seeded and pastures as well as to settle the dust storms.

Salvation Army Drive

The annual Salvation Army home service appeal for funds is now organizing in Marshall, Kittson, Roseau, and Lake of the Woods counties with headquarters in the Commissioners Room of the Warren Court House in charge of campaigner John M. Linden. All the towns and rural school districts in each county will be set up with workers, and all will be given the opportunity of contributing to this most worthy cause.

Brigadier Chesham, the commander of the Minnesota Salvation Army Division from the headquarters in Minneapolis states that with the many appealing cases which come for help to the Salvation Army daily that during the past six months a heavy burden has been carried, in that daily 1,500 stranded, unfortunate, unemployed Minnesota men who come up to the Cities from every county in the state seeking work, and finding none, have asked and received shelter and food and that since today thousands are still jobless and are asking for the bare necessities of life, a helping hand will be extended to these because all through the state many friends will gladly help the Salvation Army financially to carry out this humanitarian service while jobs are still scarce.

Until work opens these unfortunate jobless will have to be cared for. The Salvation Army is doing its bit toward relieving these and money is needed. Every amount given whether large or small will be gratefully received. No doubt, many here will gladly contribute a bit when the opportunity is given. Every cent will give something to sustain life in this zero hour of suffering among the unemployed.

Marriage and Divorce

There were 22,698 marriages in Minnesota during 1930, and 24,109 in 1929. Divorces in the state in 1930 were 2856 and in 1929 2859. Marriages in Kittson county in 1930 were 74, in Marshall 116 and in Roseau county 94, and in 1929 there were 77 marriages in Kittson, 101 in Marshall and 76 in Roseau. Divorces in Kittson in 1930 were 6 and none in 1929, in Marshall 3 and 4 in 1929 and in Roseau 5 and 10 in 1929. - Karlstad Advocate.

Livestock Feeders' Day

The Eighth Annual Livestock Feeders' Day will be held at the Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston, Monday, June 15. A feature of the days's program, according to George Wight, Animal Husbandman, will be the inspection of 32 high grade Hereford steer calves that have been on feed during the past winter.

The object of this trial has been to secure information on the comparative value of wheat and barley in the ration for baby beef calves. Lot 1 has been fed ground wheat; Lot 2, ground barley; Lot 3, a mixture of ground wheat and barley, and, Lot 4, a mixture of ground wheat and oats. All lots receive a limited amount of oilmeal in addition to sweet clover hay.

Professor W. H. Peters from University Farm, St. Paul will assist George Wight and R. J. Christgau in explaining the results secured from the different rations during the past winter.

Martin Davidson has bought a farm up at Wanaska and moved his household goods and livestock there a week ago.

School Notes

High School

Holt had a baseball game at St. Hilaire Tuesday, the score being 6-21.

Miss Johnson from the orphan's home at St. Paul gave a good talk on the Orphan's Home Wednesday. The 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th grades listened to her.

Reuben is back from the Hospital and is getting along fine. He would like to have the pupils come and visit him.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Helena Johnson has been absent because of the death of her uncle.

The 7th grade have discarded reading and are spending their time in Geography.

We are both glad and sad for the closing of school.

Third and Fourth Grades

Last Friday the 3d and 4th grades broadcasted a very interesting Weekly Reader program. Poems and speeches were given in honor of their mothers. Many of the poems had been composed by the 4th grade language class.

The third and fourth grade language classes are learning required poems for their grades.

The sand table in this room has been converted into a garden and planted to vegetables and flowers.

First and Second Grades

Russell Saboden treated us to birthday cake and rosettes Monday, as it was his birthday. On the 6th Orlin Ness treated birthday cake and cookies. We presented them with a pocket knife.

In our 2d grade language class we have been talking about planting gardens and we decided to plant potatoes and see how much they will grow before school is out.

Grygla Road Gets State Funds

The Bemidji Sentinal reports that state aid has been granted for use in improving the Grygla-Bemidji road. By enlisting the aid of the Indian agent at Red Lake, J. C. Cavell, an appropriation was secured in the amount of $6,000 from the Indian department for improving the stretch of road on the reservation.

With this appropriation, Beltrami county was able to qualify for $13,000 state aid for road purposes. The road to be improved connects with the Grygla country, skirts around the south end of the lake and then continues on to Bemidji.

Chattel Mortgage Law Amended

Under the old chattel mortgage law, mortgagors or borrowers frequently trucked grain and livestock miles from home and sold the mortgaged property under an assumed name. The borrower could not be haled into court and compelled to testify as to the disappearing chattels, as it might incriminate himself. The bill passed at this session of the legislature provides if upon default the mortgagor does not disclose what happened to the property it shall be prima facie evidence that he has disposed of it. No longer can the crooked borrower set the credit risk for the honest man.

R. Galbraith and family who have been making their home on a farm four miles south of town the past few years, have now moved onto a farm at Wylie.

Death of Gilbert Johnson

Gilbert O. Johnson of Warren died at a hospital there early Saturday morning after an illness of about ten days duration. He was working outside and contracted a cold from which pneumonia set in leaving him in such a weakened condition that high fever slowly wasted his life away.

Mr. Johnson was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson, pioneers of this community, and was at the time of his death 39 years of age. The past few years he has made his home with his family in Warren where he has been employed as tractorman for the county on their road maintenance force.

Funeral services were held here on Tuesday afternoon from the Nazareth Lutheran church, Rev. Redal officiating.

A complete obituary will be published next week.

Cases Postponed

Twenty-one appeal cases relating to Thief Lake game refuge were postponed in the Marshall county district court on Monday of last week until June 15. Because of the large amount of detail work required to prepare the cases for trial, the attorneys were not ready to proceed at this time.

Air Lines Now Belt the Globe

Planes Are Carrying Mail to All Parts of World on Regular Schedule.

Washington, D. C.—A visiting Eskimo, a tropical Uganda native, or a South Sea islander, can now send an air mail letter from the United States to his home land, and most of the journey will be in airplanes flying on regular schedules. For air mail services now radiate from Uncle Sam's realm to the edge of the Arctic, to the heart of Africa, and to equatorial Pacific islands.

Announcement that a British air mail line has established regular service between Cairo and Lake Victoria, which soon will be extended to Cape Town, directs attention to the amazing development of an industry that dates from the World war.

Routes of Flying Postmen.

"Except for two gaps, the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans, commercial air lines now belt the globe," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society. "Not only do they encircle the world, but flying postmen interlace its inhabited areas with crisscross lines and, in some cases, with parallel routes. Time-table planes carry letters, parcels, passengers and freight between the shores of all the seas except the Antartic, and over all the continents, also excepting the Antarctic.

"In all there were 172,000 miles of commercial airways in regular operation during 1930, according to a survey made by the aeronautics division of the Department of Commerce, and of this mileage more than nine-tenths carried air mail. The routes of the world's aerial mailmen would, if linked end to end, encircle the earth more than six times. In the United States 417,505 passengers, more than the population of Indianapolis, Ind., were carried on scheduled lines. Air mail amounted to 8,324,000 pounds, the aggregate weight of eight large freight locomotives.

"A world accustomed to the deliberation of railroad construction has to rub its eyes to keep pace with air progress today. Airways need no costly bridges, tunnels or fills. It might be said, briefly, that airway engineers draw a dotted line across the map, promoters sign on the dotted line, and, presto! a few days later planes are operating over it!

"The United States, one of the first countries to have regularly scheduled air mail service, is the holder of many 'firsts' in commercial aviation. America has the greatest airway mileage within its own boundaries and it has also the greatest mileage outside its own boundaries, giving it world leadership in commercial lines by a wide margin. In Newark, N. J., it now has the busiest air port in the world, with eighty scheduled arrivals and departures daily. That means a time-table plane every 18 minutes during the 24 hours. America has more cities with direct air service than has any other country.

France Our Nearest Rival.

"American lines reaching down into Central America, the West Indies and South America, and in other scattered parts of the world, bring the United States total up to 49,000 miles. America's closest rival today is France, whose lines reach across Europe and Asia to Saigon, in French Indo-China, on the shores of the South China sea, and down the coast of West Africa to Senegal, where fast mail boats connect with the French South American air systems. Under the tricolor 18,000 miles of airways were flown last year.

"Germany's mileage, more than 12,000 miles, is third. Most of the German lines are confined to her own boundaries, and all of them are within Europe.

"The Dutch have the longest air mail line in the world in the recently opened Royal Netherland Air Navigation company's route to Java, in the South seas. For 10,000 miles modern 'Flying Dutchmen' hurdle deserts, jungles, mountains, plains and seas fortnightly between Amsterdam and Batavia. Affiliated Dutch companies carry the line some 600 miles farther east to Surabaya, Java, and plans are being considered to extend it to Darwin, North Australia, linking it with Australia's widespread air mail system.

Three Races East.

"Three European nations are pushing eastward into Asia above old caravan trails which fell into disuse with the discovery of water routes to the Far East. To date the three have cooperated. The Dutch and French use the same route, as far as Rangoon, Burma, but they run their planes on alternate weeks, and each carries the mail of the other, sharing expenses and profits. The English, flying a slightly different route, have extended their lines to New Delhi, India's new capital.

"The Dutch planes, starting at Amsterdam, travel across central Europe, Istanbul, Bagdad, Karachi, Calcutta, Rangoon, Medan (Sumatra) to Batavia. The French line begins at Marseilles, jumps the Mediterranean sea to Syria, and, between Bagdad and Rangoon, duplicates the Dutch route. From Rangoon the French line continues eastward to Bangkok, Siam, and Saigon, French Indo-China. The week the French line is idle French air mail is carried on the Dutch planes; and the week the Dutch line does not run mail from the Netherlands is put aboard a French plane at Marseilles.

"The English operate independently the line that was first to reach India. In Europe this route extends from London across central Europe to Athens, Greece, and across the Mediterranean to Cairo. It then turns eastward and follows a series of ancient water holes across the desert to Bagdad. The next stage is the same as that flown by the French and the Dutch to Karachi. Regular service on the British commercial line ends now at New Delhi, the capital of India, but an extension is projected to Singapore, Australia, and New Zealand. An experimental British air mail flight is being made this month from London to Australia, via India, Singapore, and the Dutch East Indies.

Farthest-North Air Mail.

"If all the air services under the Union Jack were grouped together the British Commonwealth of Nations would be second in mileage, with some 28,100 miles. The units, however, prefer to make their own reports. The four leading divisions are: Australia, 9,000 miles; Great Britain, 8,100 miles; Canada, 7,000 miles and British Africa, 4,000 miles.

"At least a dozen different companies operate commercial airways in Canada. The longest of these is the 1,800-mile route extending over the northern wildernesses from Fort McMurray in Alberta to Aklavik, and Hershel island, on the Arctic coast.

"South America is completely ringed with commercial airways, with three different lines running parallel to each other down the east coast from Natal to Buenos Aires. Every country and foreign colony in the continent has regular air service.

"Soviet Russia claims 18,000 miles of commercial airways in operation in the Union this year, with lines running east as far as Lake Baikal in central Siberia, and south to Teheran, the capital of Persia. An Arctic line to northern Siberia points along the Yeniscei river has just been blazed by a plane using skis. China's airways connect several of the largest cities of the country, including Peiping, Shanghai, Hankow and Canton. Mexico's air lines reach from the United States border at Brownsville and El Paso, to Guatemala and Yucatan. Airplanes will supplement dog teams on 14 of the 25 star mail routes in Alaska next October."

Cleveland Is in Field Giving Speedy Divorces

Cleveland, Ohio.—Cleveland is the latest entrant in the "divorce while you wait" race. Record times are being made by other divorce mills, but Cleveland's bid for popularity is the "10 minute divorce."

Domestic Relations Judge Samuel H. Silbert has set a pace of six divorces an hour, 18 every day between 9:00 a. m. and noon. He devotes the afternoon to hearing divorce cases which are contested, and, being more difficult, they take as long as 40 minutes each.

In the "10 minute" divorces Judge Silbert not only finds time to give decisions but also to hear from the husband or wife the marital difficulties leading up to divorce action.

Unusual Pear Tree Flourishing in Iowa

Fort Madison, Iowa.—Ed G. Dobey claims to have a pear tree which is unique in horticulture. The tree is more than 50 feet high. It produces a crop of from 25 to 50 bushels. But the harvest is a fruit about the size of a man's fist, round, and without the characteristic protruberance near the stem which marks all other pear species. The tree is about 100 years old, and none now living knows its origin.

Hindu Philosopher Buried Alive

With only two small boards to cover his chest to prevent hundreds of pounds of earth from crushing him, Hamid Boy, Hindu philosopher, was buried for two hours under six feet of dirt at Los Angeles. He was none the worse for his experience.

PLAYBACK, THE STORY OF A THWARTED SUICIDE

By FANNIE HURST

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service.)

TO THE druggist, what happened one motionless July evening, on one of those streets of lower New York that after dark, whether merited or not, take on a sinister gloom, while by no means routine was nonetheless not without frequent precedent in the many years of his shopkeeping.

He knew the ear-marks so well. The strangely lit eyes, the smeared pallor, the elaborate manner of asking for rat poison. In the case of the girl with the strawberry-colored hair and the pitiful lower lip with a tiny mole that looked like a court plaster beauty spot, it was much the same as usual, except that she was so young. Not over sixteen, if the druggist was any judge, and he flattered himself that he was.

The thing to do in these cases was not to interfere; to interfere was to invite desperate and frightened recoil. There was a little shelf in the store for just such emergency. Neat little phials of barley water duly labeled "poison." In this wise, chances were the subject would have time to recover from the mental abberration and in all probability not repeat the attempt at self-destruction.

That had been the druggist's experience where he had been in a position to follow up the case, but usually they just drifted out of sight after the fiasco he thrust on them, and it was left to his intuition, which he trusted, to gauge the results.

On one or two occasions the would-be self-annihilators had returned to thank him for the deception. But more usually, at least according to the druggist's conviction, they just drifted sheepishly out of sight.

In any event, it behooved him to regard the matter that way. It assuaged his unease of mind.

The sixteen-year-old girl with the strawberry hair had not returned, but in the odd times his mind flashed back to her after the event, the druggist had leaned upon his conviction that failure to succeed that once had jerked her to her senses.

The druggist's life was too involved in the multitudinous affairs of his little business to let these matters obsess him. The exacting hours of his shop weighed heavily. It was at the period when his son was attending Pharmaceutical college and the assistant he had was all too inadequate.

The druggist had been fourteen years in his small old-fashioned shop which the antiquated air of a pharmacy still pervaded instead of the modern electrified atmosphere of the newer type of drug store. He took pride in that, and further prided himself in the fact that when his only son had finished training, he, too, would carry on in the spirit of the chemist, rather than that of the new fangled department store regime which had overtaken the corner druggist.

And even down there on the remote by-street, tidings of this small shop spread among physicians to whom the perfectly-filled prescription meant much. Motor cars that seldom, if ever, frequented that part of town swooped now with frequency into the druggist's street. His shop became a trademark of quality.

Curiously and against the modern tendency of the modern youth, the son had returned to fit himself with enthusiasm and valor for the cause of medicine, in the old shop.

Eight years after his graduation from the state college, he was practically carrying alone the increasing responsibilities of the drug store. Meanwhile of course the neighborhood had changed, becoming in a way even more remote and even more sinister in its implication.

Various the opportunities that had come and the offers from doctors to help finance the removal of the shop to a more likely part of town, but the old druggist, half bed-ridden now, was querulous when approached on the subject, and for one reason or another his son, twenty-nine past, of steady caliber, and his father's passionate pride, did not urge it.

After all, the store was the old gentleman's life and work. It was he who had created it out of pennies; nurtured it, tended it in infancy and seen it flourish with the years. The world might well be said to have beaten a pathway to the door of the little shop. It was because of his integrity that doctors with national and international reputations recommended it to their patients, and once gained, a customer remained.

No, this was scarcely the time to cross a bedridden old man in his desire for the stabilization of his life work.

Not that it was a strenuous or tormented old age into which he had entered. The little rooms above the shop where he had dwelt the twenty-eight years following the death of his wife were snug to him as the proverbial bug in its rug. Peace and pride ruled here; the peace of honest achievement and high pride in a son whose ideals were the ideals of the father and whose youth stood aside in deference to the conservatism of age.

Some day, naturally, the boy would blossom out into a new and wider enterprise. It was right that he should. He had the ability, the opportunity, the ambition. But while the father lived, there he remained in the shop, right-hand to the business, right-hand to the parent.

And of course, along about the time the older man began to feel upon himself the Shadow, there began to move across his mind torments, fears, heartaches, even terror for the future of this boy. There was something so naive and trusting and simple about this son. His one weakness in the affairs of business was his tendency to take every one at his word.

Such a youth would fall easily and readily into the hands of any woman who desired him sufficiently, and at twenty-nine there was dignity to this fellow, fine clarity of eye and brew and a naive quality that gave him added attraction.

With the old gentleman standing by to add his pinch of cynicism whenever necessary, all that was well and good. The boy had had his threats of pitfalls and come out unscathed. It was the aftermath the father dreaded. What about after he had passed on?

It therefore became almost a secret obsession with him. What about this boy's future? A woman could break or make him. What untold relief to see this boy settled in life before . . .

Intuitive always, the old man watched for signs. The reticence of secret thoughts—there was none of that. The absorption in some one of the many charming young women who come into the shop—not a suggestion of personal interest with anyone. The telephone's unexplained demands that might suggest a hidden sweetheart—there were no clews there to indicate a preparation for the inevitable.

Countless times he attempted to broach the subject but the boy would have none of it. Not interested in women! Why must father get on the morbid subject of death—nothing but gout the matter with him! Let the future take care of itself.

The future did take care of itself. One spring evening the son of the old druggist entered the sick room with a look on his face that caused the heart of the old man to leap in terror and hope.

This boy was in love!

He was, and the matter of introducing the girl to a father who depended so strongly upon intuition was a time of untold nervousness to the boy.

"If you don't like her, Father, it's terrible to have to tell you, but if you don't like her I'm going to marry her anyway."

It required only one meeting to set the fluttering old heart of the fluttering old man at rest. She was right! She was the assured future of his boy. She was everything, in her strawberry-haired prettiness, with the mouth so prettily shadowed by a mole, her eyes so prettily shadowed by good common sense, that this father could wish for his son.

One felt so at home with her at the very first meeting. It was as if one had known her before. . . .

Native African Houses

The native of Kirdi-Massa, on the west coast of Africa, builds his home of a stiff clay much like the abode used by Mexicans and Indians. This is poured over a framework of slender wooden poles used as reinforcements, and allowed to dry in the sun. The design is worked on with a crude trowel-like tool while the mud is moist.

The houses look like huge anthills, with only an inadequate opening for a door in the side and a small round chimney hole at the top to admit light and air. The design on the outside is often elaborate and worked out with the greatest pains, for it serves to identify the owner of the hut.

Lightest Known Gases

One cubic foot of hydrogen under ordinary conditions will lift .071 pound. One cubic foot of helium gas will lift .066 pound. These are the lightest gases known and practically the only ones used for balloons. It is stated that the government helium plant in Texas can produce helium at about $12 per thousand cubic feet, or at a little more than twice the cost of hydrogen. Hydrogen is inflammable while helium is not. While heated gases and smoke have a tendency to rise, their lifting power will depend on their specific gravity and on the temperature

24 EGGS AT A MEAL MODEST REPAST OF NEW JERSEY MAN

He Prefers Them Brown-Shelled, but Enjoys Them Raw or Cooked Any Style.

Fort Lee, N. J.—Walter T. Heckman is one heck of a man when it comes to eating eggs.

Twenty-four eggs at a clip are mere hors d'euvres before a man-sized meal to this big egg and appetite man of New Jersey.

And that's why Mr. Heckman scoffed long and loudly at the claims of that man in Colorado Springs who hails himself as the egg-eating champion with a record of two dozen.

"Heck," said Mr. Heckman, "I can beat him with two hands tied, after a good dinner of a whole side of pork and sauerkraut. Two dozen eggs! I've drunk off three dozen before you could say, 'Cock-a-doodle-do!'"

Hard-boiled, soft-boiled, all around the shell, the only kind of egg Mr. Heckman doesn't eat is dyed and blown Easter eggs. Fried or raw, sugared or salt, yellow and white, the only part this terror of the barnyard doesn't eat is the shell.

Mrs. Heckman just can't keep her egg-eating husband in eggs, although she buys a gross at a time. Down Main street Mr. Heckman makes the rounds each day, beneath the highly pigmented portals of the chain stores. There he takes eggs, makes a small incision in one end with his penknife, drums on the shell and the egg bout is on.

Sometimes he makes holes in a dozen at a time, and taking two in each hand, lightens the third box before the clerk has finished itemizing the bill. White leghorns, pullet or cracked.

"But it's the brown ones for me," he said. "You get a good brown egg and you got something. I would give a dozen of your pale-faced, scrawny, select white eggs for one brown egg with a fine, sun-tan complexion."

Mr. Heckman pushed his chair back from the breakfast table where a dozen shells, empty, discarded, lay like a graveyard of bleaching bones. A bowl held another two dozen, unopened, unravaged. They would do for lunch.

"Some day you'll kill yourself eating so many eggs," said Mrs. Heckman and shook her head.

"Oh, that was just a few," demurred Mr. Heckman, shoving his plate away.

"Few? You just swallowed 12."

"Wait a minute," said Heckman. "Those two are cracked. They won't keep. I better eat them. You don't want to see them go to waste, do you?"

WOMEN: watch your BOWELS

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

When you've a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all drug stores keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

THE STORY

Robert Heathers and William Heydon, to escape secular and religious tyranny, leave England in 1634 for the New world. They are welcomed at Boston by Rev. Doctor Cotton and make acquaintance with Amos Todkill, veteran soldier and woodsman.

One of the young men asked how they had treated the Indians.

"Firmly, and in a manner to my liking. They punish every white man who mistreats the savages, every savage who breaks their law. Trade with the Indians is a new kind of commerce. It may be unjust to take their furs and their land for wampum and hatchets and tin whistles, but what is one to do but give them the things they demand? They care not for money or any symbol of value. Our clothing is of no more use to them than our religion. Yet our religion, in spite of their distrust, is a comfort to them. In a pestilence they turn away from their own sick. The brethren go and minister to these abandoned ones so that often death is induced to give them back. Stern with mischief, tender with misfortune, these white folk have stayed the arrows and cooled the fierce passions of the savage. Still, he cannot understand us. Industry and thrift are not for him. He is the child of Bloody Strife."

"Soon or late we got to fight it out with him," said Todkill.

Blaxton went on: "You boys have enlisted in a war the end of which will not be in your time. It is a war against two enemies, one before, and one behind you—Tyranny and the Wilderness. The winds and waves and wideness of the sea will be your allies. There is but one power which can hold men to a purpose through many generations."

He paused to fill his pipe.

"Will you name it?" William asked.

"The power personified by Endicott—religion. Even the fleas on his dog have religion."

Robert laughed as he said: "A flea lit on me the other day and in a minute he sucked all the religion out of me. If fleas have religion I know how they get it. I can shoot and fence and ride and play football, but I have never had any gift for religion."

"It's a better game than any you know under two great captains. After all, what is religion but a window through which we should see the light of truth? Here you will find it covered with the dust of ages, the cobwebs of ancient error. It is the part of the young not to break the window but to clean and renew its panes, remembering that no earthly thing is perfect. Winthrop is a window cleaner. He would be a father to you."

As they were leaving this lover of solitude Robert exclaimed: "He's a whale. He overawes me. I feel foolish."

"Why not?" Todkill asked.

"There's no good reason," Robert agreed. "The man is a prophet."

CHAPTER II

William Falls in Love

At Doctor Cotton's party they met the great men of the parish and some lately arrived. The dinner was served at twelve o'clock. To their surprise they found both Endicott and Dudley in a genial mood.

Governor Dudley said: "Young men, I can give you no better compliment than to say that you look much alike."

Many spoke of their resemblance, but under the skin there were subtle differences not quickly discovered. William, of a family distinguished in scholarship and statecraft, had a milder and more generous temper than his friend. Robert, of a family of soldiers, was made of sterner stuff. He had a keener relish for desperate hazards—like that of racing with the king's officer—and a cooler head in facing them. He had not William's skill in choosing words to serve him. There was an inborn grace and refinement in the manners of William, which Robert had tried in vain to acquire. He was of a lighter spirit and carriage. These young men had Puritan sympathies, yet they had done no worrying about their souls. It must be admitted that neither was quite prepared for admission to the First Church of Boston, the gate of a way straighter and narrower than any they had known. They had been familiar with the fat rump of luxury and its license.

The governor kindly offered to send a man of the best judgment as to land to help them find a good site for their plantation.

It was while they were talking with him that they were introduced to the most comely girl in the colony, Miss Elizabeth Brade. She was dressed like a lady of fashion in London—satin overskirt, virago sleeves, with puffs, old Flemish lace, rare and costly jewels in her hair and on her neck and wrists.

"What a glory of youth!" the governor exclaimed as he took her hand. "I could wish it were not my duty to chide you for this rich attire. It quarrels with our teaching and is a bad example."

Quickly she answered: "You should have grace for the young."

"I have grace for every one but myself," he answered.

He exercised the license of a governor, being not himself plainly dressed. He wore a blue coat, 'broidered doublet, velvet breeches and white stockings with ribbons at the knee. Only Endicott was in sad cloth. His great white linen collar over his coat as he came in had reminded the young men of a lion's mane.

Mrs. Winthrop spoke up for the young lady: "Every girl who has to find a husband in this land should have special indulgence."

Miss Brade turned and greeted the young men and quickly chose between them. Her talk was chiefly addressed to William:

"Why are old people always thinking about marriage?" she asked. "One would suppose that our only thought was of mating. I am not a bird."

"Good! I like girls better even than larks or nightingales."

"And have they not the same right to plumage? I cannot put away my love of silk and satin and jewels and embroidery."

She lifted her skirt a little, showing her pretty ankles and a bit of the embroidery on her petticoat and gave the perfumed satin a shake.

"Do you not like the sound of it?"

"Yes, but better the grace with which you wear it and the smile in your query."

"I like you!" she exclaimed. "I am going to ask our host to make you sit by me. If I were a queen I'd hire a poet to flatter me as Mary did. It's better than wine."

The blood of both had reddened their faces a little when she left him.

William was asked to take Miss Brade to dinner. His seat was next hers. All stood with bowed heads while Mr. Endicott made a long prayer. William found another new world in the eyes of the young lady. They were brown, gentle eyes. Her abundant hair was brown. The skin on her shapely face was fair but filled with glowing vitality, her mouth charmingly curved, her teeth perfect. It was said by one who knew her at that time and whose words are now on record: "I have met the 'Lady Bess' as she is called. She has every grace of form and feature. Yet her charm is in something beneath it all, radiating from her countenance, artful and yet artless. It is a something very lovely that comes of her blood and breeding and her frank good nature. The light in her smile is like the suggestive glow of certain flowers not easy to explain."

It is no wonder, one would say, that the young man was impressed by her and the more because he had come out of great hardship to a crude wilderness. The young lady was in a merry mood not like that of the older folk at the table. The latter began at once to discuss the vexed problem: should the cross be cut out of the king's colors? All agreed with Mr. Endicott that it was a symbol of ancient Old-world superstition out of place in the New world. Still many were of the mind of Mr. Winthrop that the colony should be careful not to offend the king. The governor quoted Roger Williams, of the church at Salem, whereat the old lion, Endicott, growled:

"There is one respect in which I can agree with that man of rash and lamentable apostasies."

They spoke also of the growing fortifications which were to defend them against the threat of the archbishop of Canterbury to take charge of them.

While this talk engaged the others William and the girl gave thought to things of an interest limited to themselves.

"Tell me of dear old England," she urged. "What were you doing there?"

"School mostly. For a time I was a page to the earl of Lincoln."

"A page! What did you have to do?"

"I was in training to be a squire and finally a knight. I waited on my master and mistress, attended in the chase. Served the lady in her bower. Was much instructed by the chaplain, the lady and her damsels. Offered the first glass of wine to my master and the guests. Waited at dinner, helped with the dishes, served the napkin and ewer. I could be a great help in your house."

She looked in his eyes and answered with a smile, the light of which was long in his memory. "I think that I will engage you and mainly to serve the lady with compliments."

"My friend Robert was another page in the great house. High prices and repeated levies of the king reduced the fortune of our patron so that he had to cut down his household. We went home. Our fathers were in hard times. It was necessary to put money in our purses. We began to hate tyranny. We became rebels, fled from England and here we are."

"So it was with my father and the rest of us. He is a son of Sir Edward Brade."

"A great statesman! One of the king's opposers in the parliament. A speech of his helped to make me a rebel."

"Strange!" she exclaimed thoughtfully. "The same wind blew us over the sea—my grandfather was in part the cause of your coming as well as mine."

"Perhaps it's destiny. Who knows?"

She turned toward him and smiled, saying: "I wonder." Quickly she asked: "Do you like this new world?"

"One needs help in the task of liking it," he answered. "I begin to have a hopeful feeling."

"Oh, you will be running away soon. Here they blame one for being young. They want you to hurry up and grow old and solemn and (now she whispered) get your soul saved. There's little amusement. Many think it's wicked to be merry. One must never forget death and go to all the funerals. I wish that God were not so easily offended here. He's more indulgent in England."

The wine had been poured when Doctor Cotton arose and said: "I know that the vain drinking of one to another is to some an offense, but I have no vain purpose in proposing the health, prosperity and contentment in our land of two young men lately arrived here, namely, William Heydon and Robert Heathers, both of families which I knew and loved in Lincolnshire. They passed through a mighty storm in which their ship was well-nigh foundered in the sea and in which I am told, though not by him, that William saved the life of the well-beloved, famous Puritan Capt. John Huddleston—a life worth saving, as many have reason to know. Like a well-bred English gentleman he will of course disclaim all credit for this noble doing, but I wish him to rise and greet us after the toast is drunk."

All clapped their hands and arose and drank the toast. William then said, with a remarkable grace of manner: "I have been trying to forget that little incident of the storm of which the beloved doctor has spoken. I am sure that any of you would reach out a hand to one in trouble. That I shall ever be ready to do. But I would not have you overestimate me. You will find me a poor hero but, I hope, a good citizen. I thank the doctor and each and all of you for these welcome good wishes."

In making his acknowledgements Robert said: "We were shaken up like dice in a box and had to pump for our lives on that ship. I'm pumping now and as as scared as I was then. I'm sinking with embarrassment and gratitude. The hold is full. A pailful is enough for a sample, so I say thank you."

These two speeches illustrate the differing methods of the young men.

John Winthrop read a letter from Thomas Shepherd, minister of the First Church of Salem, in which he entreated that no sin be made of drinking one to another and thus adding a new sin to those already proclaimed by the Almighty. A number of those present agreed that there were sins enough in the catalogue.

They sat long at dinner with venison and wild turkeys and pigeons and fish and cakes and jellies and pumpkin sauce made into a pie.

Worth-While Inventions Fruit of Woman's Brain

There are a great many more patents granted to men than to women. For instance, during the first 98 years of the patent system, from 1790 to 1888, only 2,455 patents were granted to women; altogether 15,000 patents have been granted to women. The fifteen-thousandth one was granted to Rose Shulman of Brooklyn for an ice bag. The first successful application under the patent law by a woman was recorded in 1809, when Mary Kies took out a patent for a method of weaving straw with silk or thread. In 1789 Miss Betsy Metcalf hit upon an invention for plaiting and braiding meadow grass into bonnets. Miss Lucy Johnson in 1824 wove seamless pollowcases. Hannah Montague invented the detachable shirt collar. The modern paper bag is the invention of Miss M. E. Knight. Mrs. Martha J. Coston invented the flare light used for signaling by our Coast guard and mariners al over the world. The first ice cream freezer was invented by Nancy M. Johnson.

Wonderful Result of Rejuvenation Over-Dose

The kaiser's sister, Princess Victoria, who has died after divorcing a husband young enough to be her grandson, took a rejuvenation treatment before her marriage, and this led Dr. Emil Faquet, the biologist, to say at a luncheon in Chicago:

"These rejuvenation treatments, if they do nothing else, give us crop after crop of stories.

"There's a story about a sailor who was returning from a long whaling cruise when he saw a jolly flapper on the pier throwing kisses to him with one hand and pushing a baby-coach up and down with the other.

"The sailor was worried, much worried, at first, but when he went ashore he saw that the flapper was his mother.

"'Why, mother, how you have changed,' he said.

"'Yes,' said his mother, 'I took monkey gland.'

"'And who's the little darling in the coach?'

"'That's your father. He took a double dose.'"

WOMEN SHOULD LEARN USES OF MAGNESIA

To women who suffer from nausea, or so-called "morning sickness," this is a blessing. Most nurses know it. It is advised by leading specialists:

Over a small quantity of finely cracked ice pour a teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Sip slowly until you are relieved. It ends sick stomach or inclination to vomit.

Its anti-acid properties make Phillips' Milk of Magnesia quick relief in heartburn, sour stomach, gas. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement. Used as a mouthwash it helps prevent tooth decay during expectancy.

Old Tanks Put to Use

At last a use has been found for part of the equipment around abandoned stamp mills and ore smelters, relics of boom days in the vicinity of Tombstone, Ariz. Farmers are buying the galvanized water storage tanks and converting them into water tanks for ranch use. The average mine tank may be made into two 5,000-gallon water tanks.

Castoria made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

Tomato Juice vs. Tomato Cocktail

TOMATO JUICE

If you live in the West you drink tomato juice; if you live in the East you drink tomato cocktail. But East or West, if you are modern, you drink tomato juice, for, whether you like the juice plain, chilled and seasoned somewhat; or whether you like it combined with lemon juice, horse-radish and perhaps a dash of tobasco sauce—in drinking this appetizing juice you are drinking to your own health.

Ripe Tomatoes Best

Tomatoes are rich in vitamins A, B and C and contain also that elusive vitamin E, found in so few foods, which mysteriously aids in getting the iron out of other foods which we eat. Did you know that it is no longer necessary to strain the juice from your regular canned tomatoes, because owing to the popularity of tomato juice, canners now pack the juice ready-strained? And did you know, also, that the tomatoes' vitamins are not lost in the canning process, but are even more potent than those obtained in some fresh tomatoes, which have been picked green, before the sunshine has had time to fulfill its health-giving mission?

Try serving as an appetizer, a delicious glass of tomato juice—cocktail if you prefer the term—made by mixing two and one-half cups of tomato juice, two teaspoons of malt vinegar, one and one-half teaspoons of salt, one-half teaspoon of Worcestershire Sauce, ten drops of tobasco sauce and two teaspoons of lemon juice. Chill and serve with long, narrow, crisp crackers toasted with melted cheese over the top, and a dash of paprika.*

"Six" Goes To School

> "But now I am six, I'm as clever as clever,
> So I think I'll be six now for ever and ever."

So says the charming Christopher Robin of A. A. Milne's verse, on attaining the mature age of six years. And who wouldn't feel clever, after five long years of home supervision, if one suddenly stepped off to the brand new world of pupils and teachers—with a lunch-box all one's own, and maybe a book?

But the mother who watches this clever personage walk with dignity down the street, doesn't feel half so confident. What of the mid-morning milk and graham crackers? What of the hot dinner at noon—the main meal of the day which she has been serving for these five years, so that supper may be light and therefore conducive to happy dreams?

Foods for Thought

The first weeks of school are a period of adjustment, and the wise mother usually begins this adjustment a few weeks before school opens. It is well for the child entering school to have an especially nourishing breakfast that will be adequate to furnish energy until noon—a fruit, a warm cereal with plenty of rich milk, light but sustaining egg or bacon dishes, with buttered toast and a warm drink, such as a chocolate malted drink or cocoa.

The lunch-box may be made to take the place of the warm meal at home if it contains some of the strained vegetables—they are prepared in cans, by the way, if the busy mother hasn't time to prepare them—in a warm thermos container, some simple but nourishing sandwiches, such as whole-wheat bread with peanut butter, or graham bread with lettuce and cream cheese, [illegible] fruit, and enough cookies so that there [illegible] some left for the aft[illegible]

School Notes

High School

All the classes are reviewing for the state board examinations which will begin the last of the week.

The high school students are planning on having a picnic for the last day of school.

Many of the pupils have been absent from school mainly on account of having pink eye.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Eighth Grade Commencement

The annual Commencement exercises for the Eight Grade Class will be held, Monday, May 25. Prof. George B. Peterson, of the Thief River Falls High School, has been secured to deliver the address of the evening. Mr. Peterson is a gruduate of Gustavus Adolphus College and has an excellent reputation as a speaker. He has not announced his topic, but his hearers are certain to hear some timely topic discussed in a masterly manner.

Eight pupils will receive their diplomas at this time. The regular class consisting of Agnes and Ruth Engebritson, Eunice Johnson, Kenneth Larson, Clarence Ness and Ethel Nohre, will be supplemented by two additions, Lillian Melo, who finished the Grade School Course last year, and Mildred Hall, who entered High School, with two incompletes this year, and has removed them in order to receive her diploma at this time.

The High School Chorus, under the direction of Miss Mable Ahlsten will sing.

Plans have been made for a picnic on Thursday or Friday.

The seventh grade are taking their self testing arithmetic tests.

Gerinda Monson and Gertrude Rierson were visitors Monday.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The lady teachers and the fifth and sixth grade girls are planning an overnight camping trip. We are going Wednesday evening and have our breakfast out there Thursday morning.

We are planning a picnic for next week. Lowell Sovde, Glenn Carlson and Clarin Frederickson are on the entertainment committee. We are planning to have a great time.

We have three people who have had perfect attendence this year. They are Gertrude Nohre, Orlene Hagglund and Lorraine Engebretson. They will receive prizes for their efforts.

Third and Fourth Grades

Many were absent on account of having pine eye.

The garden on the sandtable is coming up.

The 4th grade have been working on transportation booklets in Geography.

First and Second Grades

The 1st and 2nd grades had a wide awake story telling contest Monday for language. They told the story of Little Black Sambo. The 2nd won by two points.

The first grade will complete both their morning and afternoon readers this week.

Gerinda Munson and Gertrude Rierson visited our room Monday.

.·.Grassy and Weedy Flavors.·.

NOW is the time to be on the lookout for grassy and weedy flavors in your cream. Flavors that show up even with the best of care.

Cream may be ever so sweet and still will go for second grade, just because it has that grassy flavor, which makes it unfit for use in Land O'Lakes butter.

By taking the cows off pasture two or three hours before milking, and by thoroughly stirring while cooling the cream it is possible to do away with a good deal of these off flavors.

A special leadership class is also being arranged by District Club Leader H. A. Pflughoeft.

The entire cost of board, room, and entertainment will be $3.00. Students are required to bring bedding, and will live in the school dormitories. All meals will be served in the school dining hall.

Registar J. W. Mlinar and R. J. Christgau are arranging a special Physical Education program, which will include swimming, basketball and other work in the new Physical Education building.

For additional information, write the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston.

GILBERT O. JOHNSON

Gilbert O. Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson, was born at Grafton, N. Dak., June 19, 1892. At the age of 3, he moved with his parents to Holt. Here Gilbert spent his early days and getting the schooling which was available he "grew in wisdom and stuture".

Sixteen years ago he was united in marriage to Clara Johnson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. August Johnson of the Mud Lake community. Gilbert farmed near Holt until 1918 when he became road patrolman for Marshall county on the road east of Holt. In 1919 he became employed by the State Highway department on Trunk Highway No. 32 where he worked until the work was motorized. Six years ago he was transferred to Warren and operated the motor patrol on Trunk Highway No. 33 until the fall of 1929 when he entered the employ of the county as one of the snowplow crew. He was one of the truck patrol crew until April 29th when he became ill and succumbed to pneumonia on May 8, 1931.

Gilbert was honest and industrious and became a friend of all who came in contact with him. The love, honor and respect in which he was hold was attested to by the overflowing congregation attending the funeral at Holt on Tuesday afternoon.

The happiness of his home to which he was very devoted, was increased by the birth of five children, ranging in age from five to fifteen; namely, Clifford, Olaf, Gertie, Palma and Alma. Besides wife and five children he is mourned by his parents, three brothers, John, Ole and Nels, and two sisters, Mrs. Garthus of Duluth and Mrs. R. Smith of Holt, and a host of other relatives and friends.—(Courtesy The Sheaf.)

In Memory

We take this means of expressing our sincere thanks to all who were so kind to us in our hour of sadness at the death and buriel of our beloved husband and father.

We especially wish to thank Rev. Redal and Rev. Carlson for their comforting words, also the male quartette for the beautiful flowers who spoke in silence of your love and kindness towards us. It shall never be forgotten.

Annual Guernsey Sale

The R. R. Valley Guernsey Breeders' Assn. will hold its 12th Annual Sale June 6th at the F. A. Uggen Farm, Erskine, Minn. The Sales Committee has selected 50 head of the finest quallty stock ever offered. All animals will be T B and Abortion tested. They are backed by A R and C T A Records.

Arrangements have been made with the Agri. Credit Corp. to have a representative present to assist in giving credit. Paul Engelstad of Thief River Falls is the sales manager.

Salvation Army Drive

The four county annual Salvation Army Home Service Appeal in which this year Marshall, Roseau, Kittson and Lake of the Woods counties will participate simultaneously, is now being organized.

From the campaign headquarters in the Commissioners' Room in the Marshall County Court House, John M. Linden announces that the quota assigned to Marshall County to raise is $2000.00. Of this amount Holt is asked to give $50.00. The local treasurer is Mr. George Fricker of the Marshall County State Bank. Contributions may be left at the bank at any time.

Since the Salvation Army does not ask funds to enrich itself but that it may help "OTHERS" who are hopeless, homeless, hungry and helpless, no doubt, many here will gladly contribute in view of the fact that just now the Salvation Army is daily giving bed and board to thousands of stranded men in Minneapolis who come seeking for work and find none. These men come to the Cities from every county in Minnesota.

Highway Oiling Commenced

The Crew of men who arrived here last week with their trucks to gravel the new highway north of here, commenced working on Tuesday. Out of the whole army of truck owners that came here to look for a job only six were put on. ~~The gravel on this job is not~~ spread on very thick as it will be used for oiling the new highway some time next month.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank the teachers, classmates and many friends for their flowers, book, letters, pleasant visits while I was at the hospital and since I came home, I also wish to thank the Sunday school for their kind greetings.

Win Battle on Child Diseases

Expectation of Life at Birth Is Increased From 48 to 58 Years.

Washington.—Up to the present time, according to the United States public health service, the most significant advances in public health achievement have been manifested among the lower age groups. It is true, of course, that the great sanitary reforms, such as the filtration of water supplies, have remarkably diminished diseases of certain kinds among all ages and classes of persons, but the actual saving of life has been most pronounced among children, and especially little children and infants. It is for this reason that the expectation of life at birth—that is, the average length of time that all children born at a given time will live—has increased from 48 to about 58 years in the last 20 years.

This is very encouraging, because it shows clearly that much of the disease from which the human race has been suffering, and many early deaths, can be avoided if specialists put their best existing sanitary knowledge into practice. But while it is gratifying to know that the nation is on the right track in the battle against disease, it is true that there is another side to the picture—a great wastage of health and life still continues, due to the failure to apply existing knowledge.

Avoidance Still Is Need.

There are some diseases which may be controlled and eventually eradicated by general measures undertaken by the community in which the individual citizen is seldom called upon to take part. There are a great many other diseases, however, for which as yet no general measures have been devised, and in the avoidance of which the individual is called upon to exert his own initiative. Conspicuous among such diseases are those conditions which are prevented by immunization.

It may be freely granted that the inoculation of individuals in order to render them immune to one disease or another is not an ideal procedure. Health officials wish as much as any one else does that there were some simpler general measure which would make this procedure unnecessary; in fact, for many years they have been attempting control by such means as quarantine, isolation and disinfection to check the spread of communicable disease.

These efforts have met with some measure of success in the case of certain diseases. For example, it has been possible to reduce typhoid fever to the disappearing point by the sanitary control of water and milk supplies, and yellow fever and bubonic plague may readily be controlled in progressive communities by measures against the mosquito and the rat, respectively.

On the other hand, smallpox, diphtheria, scarlet fever and a number of other common infections have never shown much amenability to control by any means other than by actually immunizing each susceptible individual.

Disease Unnecessary.

According to the public health service there is really no need for any one nowadays ever to have either smallpox or diphtheria, and those diseases, as is well known, have been in the past among the most deadly of scourges. Vaccination against smallpox, repeated in a few years, will protect against smallpox.

Such great improvements have been made since the introduction of this method that no one should hesitate to have his children vaccinated during the first year of life.

X-Ray May Determine Old Painting Existence

Philadelphia.—The X-ray method of determining whether an old painting is genuine may be utilized to learn if a Gilbert Stuart masterpiece hides under the more recent coat of paint applied to the sign of the old king of Prussia tavern.

The sign is now owned by the Germantown Historical society. Local traditions say that Stuart painted the original, and many old residents of Germantown believe that the ancient sign, which witnessed the march of the continentals under Washington, was covered with paint during the last 50 years.

"Stop" Sign Halts Car; Driver Dies

Los Angeles.—A "stop" sign flashed at a boulevard here and Frank D. Lovett, sixty-one, brought his automobile to a halt. When the "go" sign came the Lovett car failed to move.

Other motorists honked horns for a time and then investigated. Lovett had died from heart disease.

Pigeons Coo at Guests, Lose White House Home

Washington.—The eaves of the front portico of the White House are being remodeled to dispossess a horde of cooing pigeons that had established themselves there. Across from the White House is Lafayette park, which is almost as famous an abode for pigeons as St. Mark's square, Venice. The birds found that fresh peanuts were being placed on the White House lawn for native squirrels and moved across the street to dip into the squirrels' larder.

Carpenters were put to work to place pasteboard across the eaves in order to keep out the unwelcome visitors, who at times set up a din of cooing when famous guests and statesmen were arriving and departing from the White House.

Poor Grades; Kill Prof.

Berlin, Germany.—The newspaper Tempo reported from Warsaw that high school boys at the town of Belchatoff ambushed and killed their high school instructor, Professor Chodzko, whom they held responsible for their poor report cards.

36 States Use Central Buying

Survey Shows Big Saving Results From This New Practice.

New York.—Centralized purchasing has been adopted in 36 states and in more than 200 cities of the United States and in three privinces and 25 cities of Canada, according to a survey just completed by Dr. Russell Forbes, secretary of the National Municipal league and associate professor of government at New York university, for the National Association of Purchasing Agents.

"A sentry at the tax exit gate" is the phrase with which Doctor Forbes describes this system of governmental buying. It is "the delegation to one office of the authority to purchase supplies, materials and equipment needed for use by all the several branches of the organization."

A billion dollars a year is spent by federal, state, county and municipal governments for this purpose, Doctor Forbes estimates, and centralized purchasing can save on the average of 10 to 15 per cent of the total, he believes.

He cites many illustrations as proof of this. Under the old system of decentralized purchasing he found different branches of the same government paying different prices to the same dealers. He found favored dealers, rebates to politicians and all sorts of expensive methods which favored private instead of public interests.

Under the new system, in one contract for gasoline for the state highway department, the purchasing department of California saved more than three times the annual cost of operating the purchasing system. On a long-term contract, the state secured a base price of 12¾ cents per gallon of gasoline; at the same time the dealer's price was 16 cents per gallon f. o. b. refinery and the retail market price was 20 cents per gallon. The saving on this gasoline purchase will approximate $382,500.

In Maryland virtually every item used by the state was reduced in cost under centralized purchasing. On mimeograph paper the price was cut 26.6 per cent. Bond paper was cut 24.2 per cent. Bacon was reduced 21.7 per cent.

Similar savings were revealed by the survey in virtually every government which had adopted centralized purchasing.

Savings in the price of goods are only one of the many advantages of this system, Doctor Forbes reports. Others include better delivery service, reduction in overhead cost through reduction in personnel; reduction in the volume of "paper work"; centralized supervision over deliveries and stock, closer accounting control over expenditures, saving of discounts through prompt payment of invoices and the elimination of favoritism in buying.

Man Carries Piece of Copper in Head 11 Years

Ellington, Conn.—Eleven years after J. B. De Carli, garageman, lost an eye in an explosion, he suffered pains in his throat. X-ray pictures were taken at Hartford hospital and a large piece of copper was discovered near the root of his tongue. An operation was successful.

MOUNT VERNON HOME WAS FURNISHED BY WASHINGTON

Old Bills Show George, Not Martha, Was Our First Interior Decorator.

Paris.—The ancient bills of lading show conclusively that George Washington, not Martha, was the first interior decorator in America.

It was he who furnished Mount Vernon, planned the type of furnishings to be used, where they should go and even selected the curtains and draperies to hang at the many windows of the great house.

This information came to light in an interview with Miss Frances Wolfe, who is in charge of the interior decorating and furnishing of the French Mount Vernon erected in the Bois de Vincennes for the French colonial exposition.

"England supplied practically all of the furniture as well as the clothes used by George and Martha," said Miss Wolfe, while Grand Rapids has equipped the Mount Vernon of Paris. Fourteen different furniture companies have donated fine reproductions of the original Presidential mansion setting. The electric light furnishings and all of the mantelpieces have come from Detroit, and many authentic bits of silver and accessories have been picked up, or donated, or loaned.

"New York has furnished us with all the fabrics to be used in the mansion here," said Miss Wolfe, "and the designs and materials have been copied as nearly as possible from the originals. We have had to search for samples of the originals in museums and private collections, make sketches of them and then have them made up. It has all been terribly interesting but we have had our troubles," she added.

"Martha may have had a lot to say about what went into the original Mount Vernon, but it was George who did the ordering, and in searching through old records and documents we found that he did most of the arranging when the furniture arrived from England."

Monument Man Rules City With Undertaker

Maquoketa, Iowa.—This is not a dead city by any manner of means, despite the fact that it is run by an undertaker and a monument dealer. The city, through Mayor J. B. Harrison, undertaker, has just hired as its manager P. C. Wray, who has been engaged in the monument business for years. Both men promise to inject new life into the city and cut down its running expenses.

Thornburg, Ark.—The largest wolf caught in this part of the state was exhibited recently by Bud Woodward, veteran state trooper. The wolf weighed 75 pounds.

THE CRANDALLS AND THE STENDHALS

By FANNIE HURST

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service.)

THE house of the Crandalls in Wittegar street was one of those massive brick-and-stone affairs that looked as if it had been built and passed on for a few generations from father to son. And so it had, except in the case of the Crandall branch now in occupancy, it had been a case of from father to daughter.

Martha Crandall had married Deeping Johnson in her father's home and remained there after her marriage, and after the death of the elder Crandall.

Martha Crandall Johnson's daughter Adeline had been born in that same house, in the same stodgy, high-ceiling, wainscoated bedroom in which she herself was born.

It was a somber house, heavy woodwork, wooden pillars between archways, folding doors, long halls, pierglasses, hot-air furnace, push window-hangings, balcony-fronted china closets, hatracks, what-nots, great bronze figures for bric-a-brac, and a bronze clock with two bronze warriors for the centerpiece on the parlor mantel.

And yet withal, there was within this house, the feeling of stability. Its silent old walls had soaked into their timbers the emotions of sane, steady-going folks.

You felt about the house of the Crandalls that the people who inhabited it had not made their money overnight, so to speak. Crandalls, ever since Crandalls had lived there, had been able to afford the substantial things of life.

Little Adeline Crandall Johnson grew up in that environment, as blithely as if the somber old house had been a rose garden. She flitted through its halls. She danced through its dark corridors as brilliantly as a butterfly, caught in some strange netherworld environment.

Her parents, her staid, cotton merchant of a father and her mother Martha Crandall, who had been reared to be stolid, marveled at the electrical kind of brilliancy of this girl, their child. They marveled, and it was as if they warmed their icy fingers around the luminous flame of her personality. She was something so alien to them and yet so incalculably fascinating. She had been born in the chill autumns of their lives, when Martha was forty-two and her husband fifty. Almost any way you looked at her she was a phenomenon, the last creature in the world you would have expected to spring from the union of two such angular souls at Martha Crandall and Deeping Johnson.

Unconscious of the incongruity of her young presence in the deep brown plush of the Crandall-Johnson environment, Adeline rushed into the flush of her adolescence.

By this time the Crandall-Johnsons were at the peak of the financial history of all the Crandalls who had occupied that house on Wittegar street. Not only had Martha come into a vaster than ever accumulation of Crandall's monies, but Deeping Johnson had practically cornered one of the most important cotton markets in the history of the industry.

When Adeline Crandall Johnson was seventeen she was heiress to seven million dollars. More than that, and with an obsolete kind of solemnity of which they were totally unconscious, the parents of Adeline had picked out for her in marriage the son of another local millionaire. It was one of those predetermined affairs about which there had not been much family discussion. It is doubtful if Adeline herself, in those years when she and the fat young boy were so consciously sent to dancing school together, was even conscious of the import of what was happening.

Certainly she never took Donald Dugan seriously enough to even resent him. The fact that at seventeen and eighteen they were unofficially considered engaged, glanced off her bright young conscience with scarcely an impact.

One night, however, in the great deep brown plush parlor, the young Dugan, probably on the crest of his first fierce wave of adolence, caught her into his short round arms and kissed her wetly, patly, roundly, and with possessiveness on the lips.

Four weeks later Adeline Crandall Johnson eloped with her music teacher.

It was one of those seven-day-wonder, local catastrophies. The town shivered. The town stood aghast. The newspapers, muted, as if stunned into semisilence, carried news of that marriage as if they were printing the story of a death.

The house of the Crandall-Johnsons might be said to have shivered to its very timbers.

For three months the great, solemn, brown doors were closed to Adeline and her slender blond husband. Then solemnly, inevitably and rather terribly, with the news that Adeline was with child, they swung open, taking into the silent maw of that house on Wittegar street, the young figures of Adeline and Jacques Stendhal.

Promptly it swallowed them. Promptly it engulfed them. Promptly the solemnity of that environment flowed around them in rivers brown as mud. The young Frenchman who had married Adeline because to him she was a flower almost too sweet to pluck, pulled in the beginning against the drag of this environment.

But in the end he, too, began to succumb.

By the time Adeline's baby girl was born, the young pair were part and parcel of the house located on Wittegar street.

It cannot be said for Jacques Stendhal that he was of the stuff that parents would select as the husband of a loved daughter. He was a frail fellow, probably in character, too. A constitutional dilettante, unstable by nature, playful, and in a way that was forever to be adorable to Adeline, dependent upon her for decision.

Then, too, he loved her. There was no doubt of that. This volatile Frenchman, full of traditions that were alien to the very life and being of Adeline, had one quality of stability that was impeccable.

He loved Adeline.

It was curious, but within that household, slowly, surely, steadily, as relentlessly as the progress of a Greek drama, unspoken plans for the destiny of Adeline Stendhal began to shape themselves in the mind of Martha Crandall and her husband Deeping Johnson.

This catastrophe that had come to them was not to be borne. This frail, blond, volatile, young outsider, with the stage-like name of Jacques Stendhal, music teacher, was not to be endured within the substantial walls of the Crandall mansion.

And it must be admitted, that as time marched on, Jacques himself gave justification to their enormous resentments against him. He twaddled away his days. After his marriage, his slight income from the teaching of piano, fell off entirely. It was nothing for him to spend hours on end in the narrow strip of garden behind the Crandall house, dandling his baby girl on his knees.

In vain Adeline, as if she sensed the menace that was forming between them, pleaded with him to stabilize his life; to either resume his own profession of piano instruction, or adapt himself to some form of work in her father's vast cotton organizations.

It was no use. To all intents and purposes, Adeline had married a ne'er-do-well.

When the baby was three years old, a phantom of delight if ever there was one, affairs in that household began to shape themselves toward a climax. For thirty months Jacques Stendhal had not turned his hand in an earning capacity, the threats, the aspersions, the abhorrence of his parents-in-law notwithstanding.

For thirty months, until her sweet eyes were rimmed with weeping, Adeline had importuned, begged, coaxed. And to what end? To the end that after these importunings, Jacques, remorseful for the moment, would promise, and the scene would end in one of play; the young father, the young mother, their child between them romping in their youth and vitality through the somber rooms of the somber mansion.

It was at the end of the fourth year, however, that the older Crandalls did succeed in creating a schism. It was finally borne in upon even Adeline herself that life with this play boy was unendurable; it was not only unfair to herself and to her parents, but to the youngster at their knees, to continue as his wife.

Just why it was unfair, Adeline never stopped to ask herself, except, that according to all the traditions of the Crandalls and the Johnsons, every man must produce. It never occurred to Adeline that the fact that the Crandall-Johnsons had seven millions should be more than sufficient to offset the congenital shortcomings of Jacques.

When the little girl was four years to the day, Adeline consented to the divorce. Curious, but the reality of the situation never seemed to come home to Jacques. He could not take seriously the fact that this sweet girl of his life and heart was about to walk out of them. And yet she did.

One year after Adeline's incredible acquiescence to a divorce Jacques found himself back in his humble studio as piano teacher, pounding out his living at the keyboard.

The situation in the Crandall-Johnson house had progressed. With an acquiescence which seemed to denote that the strength for conflict had flowed out of her heart, Adeline resumed life according to the dictates of her parents. Not even the prospect of their designs for an approaching marriage with Donald Dugan seemed to penetrate the icy stolidity that had encased her since her official separation from Jacques Stendhal.

Life resumed its even flow. She had her child, a small beauty, who was permitted by court agreement, to visit her father once every month, and Donald Dugan as eager as ever to marry her was reconciled to taking the little step-daughter along with his marriage contract to Adeline.

Two nights before the wedding Adeline, still in what seemed to be her icy mantle of reserve, walked out of the Crandall-Johnson household with her child in her arms. At ten o'clock that same night she eloped with Jacques Stendhal and was remarried to him in the office of a local magistrate.

The Stendhals, there are five of them by now, are a playful, unstable, hilarious group. There are a pair of solemn brown doors that remain closed against them.

The Stendhals, both Jacques and Adeline, try to feel solemn about that Somehow they cannot.

A Candle in the Wilderness

A Tale of the Beginning of New England

THE STORY

Robert Heathers and William Heydon, to escape secular and religious tyranny, leave England in 1634 for the New world. They are welcomed at Boston by Rev. Doctor Cotton and make acquaintance with Amos Todkill, veteran soldier and woodsman. Heydon meets Elizabeth Brade, daughter of a leader in the colony.

Robert sat opposite William, between Margaret Winthrop and a comely but commonplace girl. While the dinner was going on Mrs. Winthrop observed William and Elizabeth with deep and growing interest.

"Look at them," she said to Robert. "Are they not a pair? Upon my word! I think that they like each other. They see no one but themselves. They are as those apart."

William walked with the Lady Bess after dinner, for it would seem that they still had many things to say to each other. When they returned, Mrs. Winthrop invited them to come with Robert to sup at her home a week later.

"I shall try to have all the young people come to meet you," she said. "You may count upon special indulgence."

William and Robert walked the bounds with the Brades. The walk ended at the latter's door as night was falling. Mr. and Mrs. Brade still had the light hearts of a better time and environment. They were nearing forty years of age. Mr. Brade had bought and was clearing a big tract of land and proposed to be a planter with a tenantry.

The lady said: "God help us, we are cheerful—not yet solemnified by the heavy troubles that have come to many of those around us. We have horses. Every day we ride through the dusky wood to the plantation far beyond the neck and look after the workers and have excellent good times. At home Bess keeps the house merry."

"And us longing for old England," said her husband. "Still, with my family, my pipe, my task and my horses I make out very well."

"I hear that there are lions and tigers and unicorns far back in the wilderness," said Robert.

Mr. Brade said: "Only God knows what is far back in the wilderness. Some say it is wider than the sea. There are Indians worse than the most cruel beast. They subject their captives to the vilest torment. But the near savages are now friendly, and roundabout us there are no beasts to harm one save wolves that sometimes kill the sheep."

At the door Mrs. Brade said to the young men "You will find a welcome in our home."

Elizabeth turned to William, saying with a smile: "Queen Mary said to the poet who had kept her waiting, 'Young man, you know your duty. If you are careless you may find your head in a basket some day.'"

"I think that mine is missing now," was his laughing answer.

When the young men were gone and the slave had admitted the Brades to their home, the Lady Bess began:

"Let him light the rushes, I must talk to you. I am like Columbus when he saw the green shores in the west."

"What have you discovered?" her father asked.

"The man!—The one man! I swear it by the beard of Pharaoh. He came here partly because of a speech of grandfather's. Now, that is what I call destiny."

She told them of all that the young man had said, as if it had been as precious as the wisdom of Solomon, and of the noble look of him in saying it. She crowned her enthusiasm with a trembling seriousness. "He is adorable. I have said that the words of Margaret Winthrop to her husband in the letter which he read to me, were not well chosen. I was a fool. I could now write them myself: 'I wish that I may always be pleasing to thee. I will say to thee as Abigail said to David: I will be a servant to wash the feet of my lord.'"

Roswell Brade and his wife were laughing.

"My Lady Bess!" said he. "This is like you—an avalanche of enthusiasm! I knew it would come that way. Restrain yourself. We know little of the young man. I'll write to England for information."

The girl said: "You may write but I—I am not afflicted with dim eyes and the ignorance of age."

More was said but that is enough.

A dialogue, in the room of the young men that night, was of a like nature.

Robert said: "Coming home you were as one counting the stars. I spoke but you did not hear me. Are you ill?"

William answered: "If I am, it is a kind of illness of which I would to God there were no cure. I think it some enchantment such as we have seen in the pretty comedies of Will Shakespeare. That smile! Those eyes and lips and hands and shoulders and all that is behind them! They broke the shell of some sleeping thing in me. It has come to life. I could even believe everything that Romeo and Juliet said to each other at the Blackfriars' when we went up to London. God's my witness! I could go out and sing to the moon."

"Wait till you're engaged," said Robert. "Then you have a license to be even an idiot. Solos to the moon are like a dog's sorrow. Duets are better. Just now I recommend a cold tub."

The young men sat and looked at each other and laughed.

The final scene in this little comedy of youth, old as human joy, came a week later after a supper party at Mrs. Winthrop's. William walked home with the Lady Bess at nine o'clock. Rush lights were aglow in the Brade parlor. Would he come in and sit down a while? He would. They sat down together. She began the dialogue by saying:

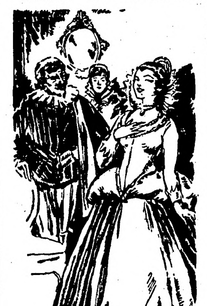
"I like to hear you talk about the stars."

He answered: "I never saw their beauty until I came here."

"Are they not as beautiful in England?"

"Yes, but my eyes have changed."

"Changed! How may that be?"



The Girl Said: "You May Write but I—I Am Not Afflicted With Dim Eyes and the Ignorance of Age."

As she spoke she turned to him with a look of interest.

"Would you care to know?"

"Well, my great need is knowledge."

She smiled, her fingers playing with the lace on her breast.

"I think that I will not tell you."

She sighed and looked into his eyes, saying: "You get me burning with curiosity and then throw cold water on me."

The young man looked at her. His passion broke its fetters of restraint. "My dear, what have you done to me?" he asked. "I too am burning in the same fire. If I am to have a bath of cold water I may as well get it now as later. You have lent your beauty to all nature. I see it everywhere. I love you. Tell me, am I to be crowned with gold or with thorns?"

He took her hand. She withdrew it and turned away from him, covering her face, and said: "Astonishment does not become me. I must hide a moment."

"I will not try to hide the truth because I cannot. It is too big to be hidden. Then—it longs to be discovered."

She uncovered her face that assumed a look of pained surprise. It vanished in a smile. She took his hand in hers and whispered: "I am sorry."

He answered: "Your eyes and your words are in disagreement."

"How can I love you? I do not even know you."

"It is easy to know me. I show you my heart. There is nothing in it save my love of you. Tell me how to win you, for I must have you for my own."

She held his hand in hers as she said: "This is madness. Try to put it out of your heart. If it is impossible tell my father of it. I am sure that he could help you put it away. If not come back to me and I will soon convince you that I am not worth the bother. Let us now talk of sheep and cows."

"No. If we change our theme let us speak of snails and turtles. Think of the wooing of a snail—even a young and winsome snail."

She answered with a laugh: "I think it would be a dull affair."

"Then why should I imitate it? Have I not what our Will has called 'the bounding pulse of youth'?"

She felt her wrist, saying: "I think that mine needs more stimulation."

There was an invitation in her eyes, and he tried to kiss her but she resisted him.

As William arose to go she added: "Consider the humble snail. He never hurries."

"The lucky snail has no clock. It is late in Boston. Even now I must argue with the constable."

At the door she whispered: "Come back to me after you have seen my father whatsoever he may say."

She stood close to him looking into his eyes. He embraced her and their lips met.

Then she said in a whisper: "You thief! Now go home and forget all about this, if you can."

"If you can," he said to himself as he went away. "What a pretty bit of impudence!"

CHAPTER III

Robert's Love-Affair and the Social Earthquake in New Boston

William had his talk with Mr. Brade. The man was kind and favorably disposed but firm as a rock. Personal and family pride were strong in him.

"I set you a hard task, but it is one to test your worthiness," said he. "You shall be welcome to our home as often as you wish to enter it. This I say because we like you and, further, your people. But you must promise on your word of honor as a gentleman that you will seek no further progress in this affair until I am better informed."

William gave his word and kept it. Still it was impossible that no progress should be made in that affair. William came to the house and returned to his home and no word of love was spoken, but youth has its way of speaking without words.

The young men bought a pair of Flemish mares and, on the approval of the court, some two thousand acres of land an hour or so from the neck, a part of which had been burned over. It was watered by streams and a small lake. Settled in a good and hopeful manner with such help as they could get, they cut a path over hard ground to a point on their land where they began clearing and burning. Amos Todkill lived in a shanty on the tract and was their overseer. Their help lived in tents. It was when William had taken water for Plymouth to hire men and buy horses that Robert went to call on the Brades. Mr. Brade was not at home. Robert sat down to talk with the Lady Bess and her mother.

"I came in the hope of finding Mr. Brade here," he began. "William and I grew up together. I am quite a rogue. He is the most innocent creature I have ever known, and the most generous. It is unnecessary to keep these young people waiting for the slow ships. I could not wait. Madam, one look in a pair of eyes like those of your daughter and my promise would be forgotten. William is different. You could search the world and find no higher type of gentleman. I came to say this, and having said it, and more even than I intended to say, I shall go."

When he was gone Bess turned to her mother saying: "A gallant, fascinating, beautiful man!"

"I fear that he is a subtle rogue of a man!" her mother answered. "You have not learned wisdom. You have a glowing eye for every handsome young buck that comes along."

While Robert was, like most young gentlemen of the time, a bit of a rogue and deeply impressed by the girl's beauty, this verdict was too severe. It would seem that many women of the colony entertained suspicions of young men who were handsome and unattached, especially if they were of the gentry and lately arrived. Wild rumors often followed them on the wings of the wind. There was little reading, but that which the Bible afforded. News went by word of mouth. Therefore, the tongues of the ladies were well developed. However, it must be said that Robert had been moved by the best of motives in his errand.

Their house was finished and furnished—a neat, simple wooden structure of five rooms with a "leanto" for a kitchen. William and Robert were living in it. A well-born, elderly lady of the parish, one Margaret Hooper, recommended by Doctor Cotton, was their housekeeper. A comely young Englishwoman of about thirty, whose husband worked in Newtown, came every day to do their cooking and milking, going home at night. Her name was Mabel Hartley.

More Proof of Wisdom of Sage of Monticello

When Jefferson imported the French sculptor, Jean Houdon, in 1784, to execute a statue of Washington, there existed the opinion that the author of the Declaration had better stick to statecraft. A short time ago Houdon's marble bust portrait of the Countess de Sabran was sold for $80,000 to a New York collector. Previously the small bust of the artist's little daughter was bought by Mrs. E. S. Harkness for $245,000, thought to be the highest price ever paid for a piece of sculpture.

Jefferson's ability to recognize Houdon's genius and his wisdom in introducing it on American shores when our art was in its infancy was part of his own genius. It was but one aspect of the greatness of the mind of the Master of Monticello, that kindly Democrat who might have been found in his study at work on an essay on political philosophy, and then again among his plants gathering seeds for a friend overseas.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry on in comfort. Take enough to assure your complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does not upset the stomach. It does nothing but stop the pain.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. A throat so sore you can hardly swallow is made comfortable with one good gargle made from these tablets. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day, or a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Vehicle at Home Either on the Rails or Road

The latest thing in railway vehicles is a coach that can run either on rails or on roads. "The Ro-Railer," built at Hudersfield, was recently tested. The road-rail coach looks at first sight very much like any other you may see on the highways of today. But a closer inspection shows that it has two sets of wheels, one with large pneumatic tires and the other with flanges to fit the rails. The new vehicle will save people the trouble of walking between their homes and the railway station. In the morning it will call at the house of those who book seats in it. Then, having picked up its load of passengers, it will make its way to a special kind of launching place near the station. Here it will drive straight on the rails, continuing its journey without a pause. In the evening the process will be reversed.

Grow Christmas Trees

Some Pennsylvania farmers who have planted Christmas trees have found that they could start harvesting in six or seven years. One farmer in Northampton county grew $1,250 worth of trees in six years on one-quarter acre which had been a garden.

Diamonds are usually possessed by others—when they happen to be trumps.

Trying to be always righteous keeps one wrought up.

Soothes restless, wakeful CHILD

THERE are times when a baby is too fretful or feverish to be sung to sleep. There are some pains a mother cannot pat away. But there's no time when any baby can't have the quick comfort of Castoria! A few drops, and your little one is soon at ease—back to sleep almost before you can slip away.

Remember this harmless, pure vegetable preparation when children are ailing. Don't stop its use when Baby has been brought safely through the age of colic, diarrhea, and other infantile ills. Give good old Castoria until your children are in their teens! Whenever coated tongues tell of constipation; when there's any sign of sluggishness, just give them a more liberal dose. Castoria is so pleasant-tasting; all children love to take it.

Better Breakfasts

"AND don't forget two tickets for tonight!" reminded Cleo.

"O.K.," replied Tony, and he was on his way.

Now this Cleopatra was not one to waylay history. She saw that her Antonio got off to business in due time each a.m. But she was an opportunist. She knew that better breakfasts foster better ideas, and that there's no better time to suggest theater tickets for the evening than right after a morning meal of pork sausages and fried meal mush, when all the world looks rosy.

A Go-Getter

Did Cleo get her tickets? Well, look over her Better Breakfast menu, and see if it isn't O.K. not only from Tony's angle, but from the angle of an expert dietitian. The mush was cooked the night before and fried along with the pork sausages, while Tony was selecting the tie to match the suspenders.

Culinary Brevities

SI JONES says, "Have your kettle boiling while you gather your corn." Canners have capitalized on this advice and have located their canneries near the corn fields. The housewife needs only to heat the can to have tender juicy corn any day in the year.

Theodore of the Ritz Carlton says that consommé to be properly made should cook from nine in the morning until five at night and be skimmed every fifteen minutes. Incidentally, that is why canned consommé tastes better than that which the average housewife has time to make.

For a tasty tid-bit, heat sardines in the can—then serve with grated orange peel.

Hickory-dickory-dock, the hands run 'round the clock—and it's lunchtime for the busy mother before the morning tasks are done. Try keeping on hand some cans of ready-prepared treats—oven-baked beans, Italian spaghetti, veal loaf and perhaps fruits for salad—for those hickory-dickory-dock days.

A timely tip for times when spending has to be closely watched is English peas. This dish costs 11 cents to prepare and serves four persons happily. Just take an 11-ounce can of peas, add one and one-half tablespoons of sugar, one and one-half tablespoons of vinegar, and two tablespoons of crushed fresh mint. Simmer for ten minutes.*

SPEND $750,000 A DAY TO MILK COWS

Machinery Helping the Dairyman Fight Drudgery on the Farm.

Three quarters of a million dollars in cash or time are spent by American farmers every day in milking the nation's cows.

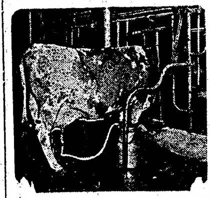
To milk America's 25,000,000 cows by hand requires the time of 2,500,000 people two hours a day, or 5,000,000 hours of human labor each day.

These figures are from computations by experts of the De Laval Bureau of Dairying.

The production of milk and butterfat on the nation's farms constitutes, in the value of its products, America's largest industry. Dairying has often been called the most profitable branch of agriculture. But dairying could be an even larger and more profitable industry, says the bureau, if every one engaged in it were to take advantage of mechanical means now available for combating drudgery in dairy farming.

Better Than Hand Milking.

No farmer nowadays would think of harvesting the wheat crop by the sickle method used in Biblical times, yet dairy farmers today spend or pay for 5,000,000 hours of labor daily in milking cows the same laborious way carried on centuries ago. Before the advent of the mechanical milker, there was great doubt that some simple dependable mechanical device would ever be invented that would milk cows better than they could be milked by hand, but after this was perfected a new group of "doubting Thomases" arose with the charge that the savings achieved by mechanical milking was more than offset by the extra labor involved in washing the utensils.



Magnetic force provides the nearest perfect milking method yet devised by man.

Light on this problem as well as answers to a number of other questions in the minds of many dairy farmers are to be found in a survey made among 1,844 users of mechanical milkers throughout the United States and Canada, according to the De Laval Bureau. Slightly more than 83 per cent of the users said that the milker reduced by half the time required to milk by hand. Exactly 99.4 per cent reported that they got as much or more milk with the milker as by hand milking, 94 per cent found their machines were easily kept clean, and 96 per cent considered their milking machine investment profitably made.

Takes Drudgery Out of Milking.

Other facts showed that the milker took much of the drudgery out of dairy farming, in addition to a saving in the cost of labor more than enough to offset the cost of the milker.

This investigation over such a wide territory and covering a variety of farm conditions holds much encouragement for the hundreds of thousands of hard-working farm people now compelled to straddle milk stools twice a day every day in the year.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, May 29, 1931. Volume 21; Number 5.

Increased Volume

Has forced us to make a change in our usual method of taking in cream, and in order to properly handle the increase without any further outlay or expensive equipment, we have decided, JUNE 1st, to split our territory, using the new highway as the dividing line.

All of the patrons living on the east side of the new highway are asked to bring their cream on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, as before, and those living on the west side of the new highway are asked to bring their cream on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Also, in order that we may churn our Land O' Lakes cream on Saturdays and not on Sundays, we will stop receiving Land O' Lakes at 10:00 a. m.

This change has been made to save our patrons as much expense as possible and thereby enable us to put that much more into the purchase of butterfat, and we will appreciate and expect your support and cooperation.

Yours for higher prices,
Farmers Co-operative
Creamery Company,
Holt, Minnesota.

Graveling Job Finished Here

The gravel crew that worked here last week finished the job on Monday and have now moved the outfit to Middle River. They graveled the new highway as far north as the Newfolden road from here and, will now gravel five miles each way out of Middle River from the pit there.

According to reports given us the state used about 1500 yards out of the pit here which they purchased from Ole Reierson.

Seven 8th Graders Graduate

Seven students of the local school graduated from the eighth grade on Monday evening at the commencement exercises held in the High School auditorium.

The student whom graduated from the 1931 class were: Eunice Johnson, Ethel Nohre, Kenneth Larson, Clarence Ness, Agnes Engebretson, Mildred Hall and Ruth Engebretson.

Lillian Mello who graduated last year but started school here too late to have a diploma ordered, sat in with the class on Monday evening and received her diploma.

Many Oil Products

The total number of chief products that are taken from crude oil is estimated at nearly 500. And there is a possibility that still more may be evolved by new "cracking," distilling and refining methods.

Going Somewhere

Some one has said that it is hard to meet the average mind because it isn't going anywhere. The difference between real thinking and reverie is that reverie isn't going anywhere. Just letting things run through your mind, ungoverned, isn't thinking. Life is too short not to be going somewhere.—Exchange.

Convention Held

A convention of Lutherans of the Thief River Falls Circuit of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America was held here on Tuesday and Wednesday at the Nazareth Lutheran church. The convention opened on Tuesday morning with a long business session. Rev. Fjelstad of Thief River Falls, president of this circuit presided.

On Wednesday a very large crowd was in attendance at both the forenoon and afternoon sessions. In the afternoon Rev. P. B. Trelstad of Moorhead who is financial secretary of the Northern Minnesota district, spoke on the financing of our church, the amount that must be raised for the next budget and other projects.

Pastors and delegates from every call in the circuit were in attendance both days.

Makers of History

ON Memorial Day we pay homage to the heroes of the past. And we take thought of our own past in carrying on their work.

The influence of great men on history is important. But it is the common folks, sometimes the humblest; mothers and fathers; the ordinary folks of this work-a-day world — who really shape fundamental human destiny.

So we are writing history every day. May our work be worthy of the heritage of those whose memories we revere.

.:.Grassy and Weedy Flavors.:.

NOW is the time to be on the lookout for grassy and weedy flavors in your cream. Flavors that show up even with the best of care.

Cream may be ever so sweet and still will go for second grade, just because it has that grassy flavor, which makes it unfit for use in Land O'Lakes butter.

By taking the cows off pasture two or three hours before milking, and by thoroughly stirring while cooling the cream it is possible to do away with a good deal of these off flavors.

A Tale of the Beginning of New England

THE STORY

Robert Heathers and William Heydon, to escape secular and religious tyranny, leave England in 1634 for the New World. They are welcomed at Boston by Rev. Doctor Cotton and make acquaintance with Amos Todkill, veteran soldier and woodsman. Heydon meets Elizabeth Brade, daughter of a leader in the colony and falls deeply in love. The young men settle down to the life of the colonists.

They had fish in plenty coming every week from the northern coast, and Todkill kept them supplied with venison and dried berries. They had a cow that was pastured in the common fields and a small stable. Moreover, the ships were bringing oatmeal and pitchsuet and tallow and conserves of red roses and mithridate. They could also buy cornmeal for hasty pudding.

Through the autumn and early winter William and Robert were at work with Todkill and his men. When the snow came deep enough to clog their affairs, they broke camp in the forest and waited for better weather.

Every Sabbath they went to the crowded meeting house and sat on the stairs with a parcel of young boys. Constables, each with a black staff tipped with brass, were at its three doors to prevent people from coming out and dogs from going in. The dogs of Boston, abandoned by their masters and playmates, were depressed in spirit and wont to howl with loneliness. The long prayer, the chapter and its exposition by Doctor Cotton, the sermon by the pastor, the psalm singing, the solemnity on many faces wearied the young and put them in dread of the Sabbath day, especially in severe weather with no heat in the meeting house. Our young men found the prisoners, who came under compulsion with armed guards, a diverting part of the congregation. Robert speaks in a letter of the stir when some "blubbering person" made a public confession.

Todkill and Blaxton came often to while away a winter afternoon with them. Bess came with her maid to bring them a wild goose—one of the two which her father had shot when the snow-laden drag was flying low. As she went away, Blaxton exclaimed: "What heavenly pulchritude is this!"

"I hope that she will be my wife," said William.

"A lamp of virginity! And what a pretty redness of cheek and lip!" the old gentleman exclaimed. "Looking at her I regret my age. Counsel to the young is like giving mutton to a horse. You will both do well to marry, with the red blood of youth in you and a lusty young wife in the kitchen."

He told how a baronet had come over with a comely paramour and been compelled to run for his life and find refuge among the savages.

"Neither heraldry nor wealth can prevail with the court if one is up for clicketing. Will Shakespeare once said to me, speaking of the Puritans: 'There are those who think that because they are virtuous there should be no more cakes and ale.'"

It reminded Todkill of the killing and boiling of a Puritan by "man eaters" of the wilderness.

Blaxton interrupted him, saying: "I make one remark. A Spaniard is that tough they hang him three days before he is boiled. If you have a Spaniard to be cooked I will listen, but if he be an Englishman I beg you to desist. It provokes me like a wringing of the nose. Turn somersaults or sing a bawdy song if you will, but no more torturing of the king's men."

It was after this talk that the young men decided to displace that "lusty young wife" in the kitchen, Mabel Hartley.

"Her face and form are too winning," said William. "We do not need a Venus in the kitchen. To be sure, she is a wench, but we are human and we want to live a few years yet."

In this they were of the same mind. They drew lots to decide which should dismiss her and the heavy task fell to William.

Mabel Hartley had served in the kitchen of the earl of Warwick. She had married one of his stablemen and come to America in the westward rush of 1632. Her husband had turned out to be a heavy drinking roysterer incapable of supporting a wife. He had found work in Newtown where he progressed in the downward way. She had left him there and come back to Boston. The young woman had agreeable manner and a face and form which many of higher birth had regarded with envy. She had flaxen hair, eyes of the shade of a bluet in the meadow grass and a fair skin. Her cheeks glowed with color. Robert Heathers said in his diary that she was about five feet and six inches tall, straight as an arrow, and that "her plump breast and slender waist and angles would have filled the eye of old Phidias. It is a pity that she was so thrown away. Henry VIII would have educated her and brought her to court."

William found her at work in the kitchen.

"Mrs. Hartley, I am sorry to have to tell you that you must find other employment," said he.

The young woman asked: "Have I not pleased you, sir?"

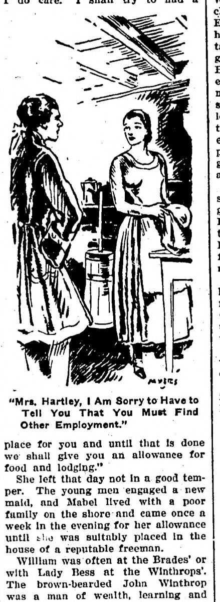
"Too well," he answered. "We are young and you are that pleasing to the eye it will make gossip if we keep you here. They tell us in Boston that we are all filled with corruption. There are moments when I can believe it. It is said, I hear, that you and Robert already know each other too well."

He smiled, but she flushed with anger.

"I would not have you think that I believe it," he went on. "You are no brabbling, limber-tongue sossle like most of the women who do kitchen work. You have a brain in your head. You have a comely face and figure. You know the town you live in as well as I do."

"Yes, I know you rich people. A woman who works is like your cattle. You do not care what happens to her."

"You are in error," he answered. "I do care. I shall try to find a place for you and until that is done we shall give you an allowance for food and lodging."



"Mrs. Hartley, I Am Sorry to Have to Tell You That You Must Find Other Employment."

She left that day not in a good temper. The young men engaged a new maid, and Mabel lived with a poor family on the shore and came once a week in the evening for her allowance until she was suitably placed in the house of a reputable freeman.

William was often at the Brades' or with Lady Bess at the Winthrops'. The brown-bearded John Winthrop was a man of wealth, learning and dignity; his wife a lady with unusual graces. The atmosphere of affectionate devotion was in their home. Here was an example of married life not without its effect on the young of the parish.

"Youth is of perishable stuff," he said to the boy and girl. "We should ever be looking toward the future. Therefore, the mainstays of our commonwealth will be the school and the church. I look forward to a time in this land when education will not be regarded as the privilege of the few but as a duty which the state owes to every citizen."

William was often thinking of this vision of his wise friend. In May Winthrop was elected governor.

The summer returned. The young men had resumed their task in the wilderness. Day and night they were going back and forth on the well-worn path of their clearings. Ships laden with men and women, with sheep, goats, horses and cattle had arrived. On every side one could hear the sound of saws and hammers. The colony was growing. It was at peace.

Friendly savages came in their feathered caps and blankets, and fantastic necklaces and bracelets, and traded and begged at the stores and stood about, silently gazing at the strange, hurried, restless doings of the white folks, and went away. They feared the strong hands of these pale-faced people, swift to punish or to help. No one feared them. The Indian menace had passed. Only the Pequots were in a bad temper, but they were far out and beyond the valley of the great fresh-water river in the west.

A ship brought the long-desired letters. Roswell Brade, not easy to satisfy, was satisfied. William and Bess were preparing for their examination as candidates for baptism in the church. Meanwhile Robert had had a deep experience. The good fortune of his friend in finding the stay and solace of an affection well placed had not been his.

At last he had hope of it. One day at Mrs. Winthrop's he had met Peggy Weld—a tall, light-hearted, red-cheeked blonde—lately arrived from England with her brother Henry. Her hair was beautiful. There was much talk of that wavy silken crown of red gold among the men and women of Boston. She had dark blue merry eyes. Her face was not so finely molded as that of the Lady Bess, but she was good to look upon. It was her love of fun—her gay manner and her talk—that chiefly pleased the boy Robert, although it shocked the good people of the parish. Soon the ladies began to chatter of her light carriage and to shake their heads.

"I'm pinked at last," the young man said to his friend William. "I'm not going to gaze at the moon and twitter. I could sing pretty but I have no perch to stand on. I have a rival in Jim Rosewell, who has been bossing the fortifications. He's a living Apollo. I may have to poison him."

"Bob, good luck to you," said William. "It's the thing I've been hoping for. She's got a brain in her head. Good family and all that! The type that stirs the blood in a man! She's a pearl."

"For the present she's just a sweet-voiced bird in the bush," Robert went on. "She's as wise as she is beautiful. She loves joy. She's a ray of sunlight in this gloomy parish. Lord! It's a land of long faces. I wonder why it makes a man solemn to get his soul saved. Peggy could be a help in the great problem of New Boston."

"What problem?" William asked.

"The dissipation of solemnity and keeping the grave out of conversation and in the cemetery where it belongs and hell in the hereafter. For my own part I simply refuse to be worried about my soul. For that reason, I will not join the church."

Robert was still a rebel. Next day he rode with Peggy to the clearings. On the way he said to her:

"Peggy, I couldn't make love in a saddle. One needs free hands and feet and proximity. He might want to run. I warn you that I have serious intentions. I'm a little worried about Rosewell. If I'm to have a race with him, I ask for fair conditions."

The girl blushed as she answered: "This is a subject on which I cannot talk with you. I am engaged to Mr. Rosewell."

"He's a quick starter. I have had no chance to show you my pace."

"I can imagine what it would be," she said with a laugh. "You see, Jim Rosewell and I were friends in England."

"Well, permit me to say that I love you and that I do not surrender. I shall keep on loving you because I cannot help it. Not until I must will I bow my head to the deepest regret of my life and say that I wish you happiness and good luck with Rosewell."

Widely Used Quotations Too Frequently Garbled

Usually when we think we are quoting some thoughtful expression of the past, we are only misquoting. And the chances are we don't know whom we are misquoting!

The Golden Book Magazine supports the truth of this statement with a list of frequently misused quotations, all part of our everyday speech, some of which have been changed only by a word, but others of which have lost their original meanings entirely.

Today, for instance, we say: "All the world loves a lover." But Emerson said "All mankind loves a lover." We say: "Accidents happen in the best regulated families." What Dickens said was: "Accidents will occur in the best regulated families."

Cervantes in the Sixteenth century gave birth to the modern phrase, "Familiarity breeds contempt." But what he said was: "I find my familiarity with thee has bred contempt."

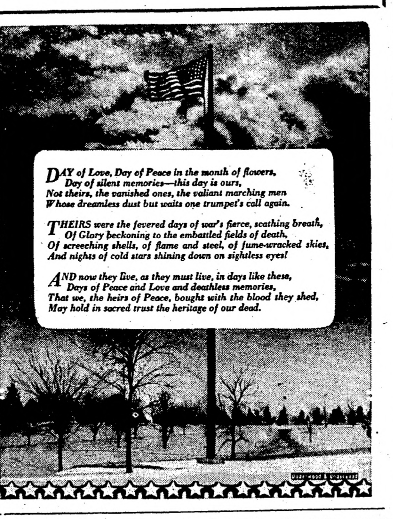
Music Score for Blind

Negotiations to develop an international system of music notation have been going on for some time and the Braille Press has put into effect a standardized system so that musicians of any nation may be able to read the music of any other country.

Island Dwellers

There are only two good ways to come to Stockholm. One is to approach slowly by the canal from Goteborg, and the other is to arrive by sea through the glorious channels between its 75 miles of islands. The rugged sea and landscapes of these rocky islets not only made artists happy, but many families of the city make their summer homes on an island, and the business men commute daily by launch to their work. Everybody has a yacht or some more modest craft and they spend nearly all day on the water.

NATION'S TRIBUTE TO THE DEAD



DAY of Love, Day of Peace in the month of flowers,
Day of silent memories—this day is ours,
Not theirs, the vanished ones, the valiant marching men
Whose dreamless dust but waits one trumpet's call again.

THEIRS were the fevered days of war's fierce, scathing breath,
Of Glory beckoning to the embattled fields of death,
Of screeching shells, of flame and steel, of fume-wracked skies,
And nights of cold stars shining down on sightless eyes!

AND now they live, as they must live, in days like these,
Days of Peace and Love and deathless memories,
That we, the heirs of Peace, bought with the blood they shed,
May hold in sacred trust the heritage of our dead.

"Audacity" Won Praise of Foch

American troops helped General Gouraud's French army shatter the German menace to Rheims when they stormed and captured Blanc Mont, a fortified ridge northeast of the city. The Americans took this ridge in two hours, charging up a half-mile of cratered chalk hillside strewn with blasted trees, said The Stars and Stripes of October 11, 1918.

Late Tuesday, while the Americans were still going forward against stiff resistance and the 2,500 prisoners they had taken were being augmented by driblets of German guard and jaegers, a rainbow broke against the clouds away from the setting sun, and the battle was fought on between the rainbow and a western sky that was brazen and red.

Aided by French and American artillery, the Yanks fought their way to the foot slopes of the height. Then while guns big and little were still playing on the crest, they leaped over trunks of trees freshly blasted, clambered over pits dug by shells in the soft chalk gravel, hopped through brambles of barb wire, skirted a ravine full of enemy machine guns, and charged straight at the crest defended by machine guns and underlain by a tunnel system. On that crest they captured German machine gunners in concrete and steel cages who had been firing with the aid of periscopes.

Gouraud Visits P. C.

General Gouraud himself visited the American post of command and paid a tribute to the ability of the American soldiers. General Foch, too, wired an appreciation of the "audacious advance."

It was estimated that six German divisions were opposed to the Americans in their six days' fighting. At any rate, the prisoners represented such a scattering of regiments that the French were terming the captives "the salad." The Prussian Guards were there, some of them known as Wilhelm's Own. The "green lizards" were there, too, many of them—jaegers in their green uniforms.

Illustrative of the swiftness of the American advance was the capture west of Blanc Mont by one American battalion, commanded by Capt. George K. Schuler, of 269 German soldiers, 4 officers and 75 machine guns. And the American battalion did this without a single casualty of its own, a happening said to be almost unprecedented in this war.

The capture was accomplished by an enveloping movement close upon the barrage, and the Germans found themselves trapped in holes, with American rifles and machine guns around them.

There was still another unprecedented happening. A French officer came back into Souain marveling—he had seen an American soldier herding together a German artillery staff which he had captured single-handed, 1 major, 1 captain, 7 lieutenants, and 22 privates. Corporal Fred D. Hubbell, of Toledo, Ohio, gets the official credit for this feat, which happened on the morning of October 3.

What Corporal Hubbell Did.

Corporal Hubbell's company had run across a series of dugouts of German artillery officers and had taken a few prisoners who said there were no more Germans underground. A half hour later, while Corporal Hubbell's company was encountering machine gun resistance and expecting a counterattack, the Ohio boy was crouching in a dugout entrance. He tells what happened:

"I saw a German private stick his head out of the door before me," he said. "I told him to put up his hands, but he jumped back inside. I heard him speaking to me in English, and finally I persuaded him to come out. He said there were 30 others in the dugout. I told him there were plenty of Americans all around me, and the Germans all might as well surrender. He said he'd go down and talk to them.

"He went down, but didn't come back. After a short time I yelled down I was going to throw a hand grenade. I waited, but nobody came up. There were several dugout entrances near, and I was afraid they might catch me from behind, so I moved to the left where I could see all the entrances.

His Move a Lucky One.

"In a minute another Heine stuck his head out and ducked back. I was getting real leery. Just then an officer appeared at another dugout steps with a pistol in his hand, apparently looking for me. It was lucky I had moved. When he saw me he was so surprised he tumbled over backwards down the steps.

"Then I ran to the steps and yelled again I was going to throw down hand grenades if they didn't come out. The private who spoke English finally came up and stood at the entrance and passed on my orders. Pretty soon they began to come out with their hands in the air.

"When I had them all lined up and the other boys arrived, the English-speaking private told me that when he'd gone down, the first time and told the officers there was only one American outside they were furious. They weren't going to surrender to one American private. They ordered the private to sneak out and shoot me, but he refused.

"All the Germans had been caught in their dugouts by our barrage, they said."

AFTER 40
bowel trouble

Constipation may very easily become chronic after forty. And any continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles and a host of other unpleasant disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. Whenever they need any help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, or when your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

REGULAR PAINS

The modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure you complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does nothing but stop the pain, so use it freely.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day or a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Tame Hell Gate After 62 Years

Most Treacherous, Wicked Whirlpool in World Conquered by Engineers.

New York.—To reach New York city through Long Island sound ships must sail the East river, which is not a river at all but a tidal strait. And right in the middle of this misnamed stretch of water is Hell Gate, the most treacherous, wicked whirlpool that ever sucked a boat into Davy Jones' locker. For 62 years man and dynamite have nibbled at the rock bed of this channel, and now it has been tamed. Army engineers now announce that the raging current has been slowed down to six miles an hour, says Tome Pettey in the Chicago Tribune.

There are new charts in the pilot houses of the Boston bound steamers, and the tug captains will haul their fleets of sand scows safely under Brooklyn bridge with never a fear of piling them up in some tenement house back yard. Battleships will move safely and excursion steamers this summer will be able to tie up at the foot of Forty-second street in midtown Manhattan.

High Toll of Lives.

In the last 12 months 51,708 cubic yards of rock have been blasted from the bed of Hell Gate and, inch by inch, the winding, dangerous "S" passage has been straightened. Depths which as late as three years ago ranged from 19 to 23 feet now have been increased to 36 feet and gradually the channel is widening.

So far the struggle to tame Hell Gate has cost 16 lives, but the whirlpool itself has claimed almost 2,000. Since 1869 more than 1,200 craft have been whirled to destruction against saw-tooth rocks and projecting reefs.

The work of engineers of the United States coast and geodetic survey in Hell Gate in 1930 cost approximately half a million dollars, and the struggle has been going on since 1869.

The casual passenger on a sound steamer these days would never know that dynamite crews had to blow the nose off the "frying pan," blast "Way's reef" skyward, blow "Baldheaded Billy" rock to bits before the days of comparative safety arrived.

It was Brig. Gen. John Nelson who began the job back in the 1870's that the army engineers corps now is finishing. Present-day dredging and blasting is of great magnitude, but it is not so exciting as the job General Nelson did in 1875. His problem was to trim Hallet's point so that passing vessels could swing far away from the "Gridiron," the center of the whirlpool. Others had attacked the rock from the top and side. General Nelson took one look and attacked from the bottom. A shaft was sunk from the Long Island shore and for almost a year miners and sappers drilled and bored until they had made Swiss cheese of the sawtooth tip of Hallet's point. Then they packed the holes full of dynamite, set fuses, and crawled ashore.

First Great Peril Removed.

There was a general warning of the approaching blast, and residents along both banks of the East river fled to the streets, fearing their homes would tumble down. General Nelson's young daughter set off the charge in such a ceremony as might have marked the launching of a battleship. More than 300 feet of rock poured into the water, to be hauled away by dredging scows, but not a single house fell. The tide rushing in from the sound broke smoothly on a straightened shoreline and part of the threat of the "Gridiron" was tamed.

Since that day the dynamiters have pecked away at the rock lined shore and the channel bed and the East river from Long Island sound to the navy yard in Brooklyn grows straighter year by year. The army engineers say the job will be ended in ten years.

Einstein's Relativity Is 4th Great Step of Science

Los Angeles.—The four great landmarks of science which mark its forward progress are, according to Prof. Albert St. John, astronomer of Mount Wilson observatory, the following: The Copernican system dealing with the relationship of sun and planets; Sir Isaac Newton's law of gravitation; the theory of evolution by Darwin and Wallace, and Prof. Albert Einstein's theory of relativity.

Mouse Up His Leg and Out His Sleeve

Meriden, Kan.—Elver Clark, farmer living near here, never has been fond of mice. He is less fond of them now than ever. He was working in a corn crib. A mouse, startled and seeking escape, ran up his trousers leg. He made a grab for it, but missed and the mouse continued his upward journey.

Mr. Mouse reached his shoulders, with Clark still grabbing and missing. The little rodent ran down his shirt sleeve and jumped out right over his hand, lighting on the floor. It dodged Clark's foot and scampered away to safety.

KIDS BECOME REAL ACTORS ON MODERN SCHOOL STAGES

Theatrical Equipment in Some Institutions Rivals That of Broadway Houses.

New York.—Has your child succumbed to the lure of the footlights? He probably will soon, though he may be only kindergarten. Children of all ages are taking to the stage, for modern schools all over the country are transforming their bare old assembly rooms into intimate little theaters, whose scenic and lighting equipment rivals that of many Broadway playhouses.

As a result, stage-struck daughters of five or six may not be uncommon in the near future. It is a delight for almost any child to act on a stage equipped with asbestos and close-in curtains, drop scenes, spot and footlights and other elaborate fittings which used to be found only in big theaters. Moreover, the opportunity to participate in and see real plays is stimulating in children an enduring love of the theater.

The development of the old assembly room from a barnlike hall with a bare rostrum to a modern theater, is described by Frank A. Childs, Chicago architect, in the American Architect. Mr. Childs, who has specialized in designing school stages, describes some whose curtain and lighting equipment cost from $8,700 to $13,150.

"In the modern school, the old barnlike assembly room has given way to the intimate theater of 700 to 1,000 seats, where various activities require its use every period of the school day," he writes. "While taxed to capacity during the day, its use at night by the community has reached the point where, at the Haven Intermediate school in Evanston, Ill., for instance, bookings must be made one year in advance."

In some schools, Mr. Childs says, dressing and makeup rooms are provided. Many schools are installing radios, pipe organs and sound motion picture equipment in their auditoriums, and the halls themselves are fitted with dimmer lighting equipment so that the change from light to darkness and vice versa can be gradually made.

New Design Sought for American Quarter

Washington.—Secretary of Treasury Mellon soon will invite artists throughout the country to submit designs for a new 25-cent piece which will be issued next year in connection with the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington.

The coin will be the first to bear the image of Washington. It is authorized by legislation passed in the closing days of the last session of congress.

On the front of the 25-cent piece now in use is a full-length figure of a woman, while the back is engraved with an eagle in flight.

Speediest Rail Engine to Go to a Museum

London.—The railroad engine City of Truro, which holds the world's speed record, is to retire and be preserved in the York Railway museum.

This powerful engine, looking somewhat out of date compared with modern streamlined types, made the highest authentic speed ever recorded—102.3 miles an hour—while competing for an American mail contract on the run from Plymouth to London as far back as 1904, and she still holds that record.

At that time there was a great fight between three railroad companies for the contract of the ocean mail traffic, lines serving Liverpool, Holyhead and Plymouth being concerned. The City of Truro's record run finally decided the issue and established Plymouth as best port for transferring New York to London mail from ship to train.

Ambulance Crew Refuses to Put Husband to Bed

Bridgeport, Conn.—When Robert Wheeler, fifty-one, refused to obey his wife's command to go to bed and walked out of their apartment, Mrs. Wheeler called the emergency hospital. A doctor and ambulance driver responded to the unusual request and found Wheeler in the cellar, sitting near the furnace, smoking his pipe. Wheeler still refused to go to bed so the hospital attaches decided he was old enough to know his own mind and left.

Community Building

Personality Big Part of Community's Assets

Four requisites are needed for the creation of a desirable community. Dr. Charles Thompson, dean of the school of commerce of the University of Illinois, points them out as follows: Diversified, prosperous industrial life; honest, efficient, economical local government; widespread education, and personality.

The last requisite in his list is one which many communities overlook or ignore. Yet it is a quality which gives a distinctive touch to a community and sets it apart from others that have identical advantages in population, industry, government and schools. Community personality is not built in a day, neither can it be made to order. It is one of the qualities which a city unconsciously acquires as its citizens cultivate lofty principles of good government, culture and refinement.

The men and women who reside in such a city carry with them to other communities the evidences of this community personality. Mere mention of the name of the old home town suggests to new friends and neighbors the qualities in which it excels. Community personality is created by the men and women who claim the city as their home. Their idealism and their efforts to attain it are the factors that give a good name and a fine reputation to a city.

The cultural aspects of a community are worthy of intensive cultivation.—Richmond Paladium.

Fireproof Building Not Always Fire-Resisting

"With the introduction of fire-resisting construction there developed a more or less false sense of security," Herbert E. Maxson writes in an article in the American Architect, in pointing out the layman's mistake of taking "fireproof" construction too literally.

Many buildings commonly called fireproof, he writes, have walls and interior partitions of materials that will burn. Another fallacy common to the layman is the belief in the strength and dependability of steel under fire. Uncovered steel standards, Mr. Maxson says, are among the things that lower the percentage of fire resistance in so-called fireproof buildings. Bare steel may cause the fire-resisting properties of a building to drop from 20 to 80 per cent.

The greatest fire hazard to buildings built of some so-called fireproof materials comes during construction. It is then that damage may be done which, because of the state of the building, costs several times what it did originally. The Riverside church in New York, while being built, suffered damage from a scaffolding fire to the extent of 200 to 300 per cent of the cost of the parts damaged.

Home Buyer's Requirements

A plea for a wider individuality in home design is made by Chris Paschen, Chicago, building commissioner, who says:

"Buying a home is one of the most important decisions in every man's life. It is the culmination of years of working and saving—it represents the place of his greatest happiness. Naturally, a home to him must not only provide the cold assets of light and heat, good streets, adequate transportation and other similar facilities—it must represent to him a definite creation for which he has hoped and planned and of which he has dreamed.

"Some builders fail to understand this psychology of the home seeker and wonder why he reacts adversely when shown the supposed advantages of a box-like structure, similar in every cut and design to the surrounding homes. The influence of the woman in home buying also is either unrecognized or, at least, the developer does not know what a deciding influence real distinctiveness of architectural design will have upon the feminine mind."

Plea for Vegetable Gardens

O. L. Moore, secretary-treasurer of the Onion Set Dealers' and Growers' association, said at a meeting at Chicago:

"When prosperity abounded home gardens were given up even by small town residents who had ample room to plant the seeds sent them by their congressmen.

"Now, however, we can safely predict that suburbanites, men with city lots and residents of small communities are going to renew back-yard agriculture to supply the family table."

Plan "Smokeless Town"

The building of a "smokeless town," a residential community of 200 homes in New York city, which will use gas for all service purposes, including house heating, is described in the Appalachian, issued by Appalachian Gas corporation. Health Commissioner Wynne of New York recently stated that the smoke evil costs New York $96,000,000 yearly.

Beauty of Old Brick

The paramount lesson of old brick structures is an appreciation of the mellowed beauty that comes inevitably with the years. No other type of exterior wall material insures it or approaches it in artistic appeal to such an extent.

Few Human Voices That Are Exactly Similar

In the course of an explanation of the "phantom hounds," so often written of in British sporting literature, the sportsman brushes against a teasing subject. The phantom hounds, never seen of man, are a product of confusion; man and fox alike are deceived by the similarity between the cry of a flight of wild geese, borne over the wind, and the more familiar cry of the hounds. There are many recent instances of this confusion; even the acute hearing of the wild fox plays tricks.

It is true that almost every sound lends itself to description in terms of another. The distant airplane sounds like a hornet near at hand. Remote thunder sounds like the dislodging of lumber in some celestial yard. A water glass can produce a bell-like sound. The saxophone can contrive to ape the backyard cat. Yet one instrument of sound—the human voice—lends itself uncannily to shades and degrees of individuality. There must be identical voices in the world, or there may be in a township, for that matter; but they are so rare that identification of those we know can as often as not be made, sight unseen, from a few words spoken in the next room.—New York Sun.

High Scoring

Wilburta and Jim were having an interesting time throwing wooden balls at the open mouth of a black comedian. It was a simple game given to the children as a Christmas present. Something went wrong and an argument ensued. It was a question of points.

"An' stop your cheatin'."

"I'm not cheatin'. I've got six."

"Then I've got ten, twenty, a hundred."

"I've got a million, billion, trillion," said Wilburta.

"Well, I've got whillions," responded Jim.

Treasure Seekers Busy

More than 5,000 people from all parts of the world visited Madrid, Spain, last year for the sole purpose of searching old documents for clews to the possible locations of wrecks of gold ships sunk many years ago. They were bent on plans for recovering the gold sunk with Spanish galleons in tropical seas.

Hope for the Chestnut Groves

Belief the chestnut is not doomed to destruction in the forests of Pennsylvania, but will eventually regain its position of importance as a valuable timber tree, is expressed in a statement by State Forester Joseph S. Illick. The chestnut blight made its appearance in the state about 20 years ago and since then practically all chestnut trees of commercial size have been killed.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

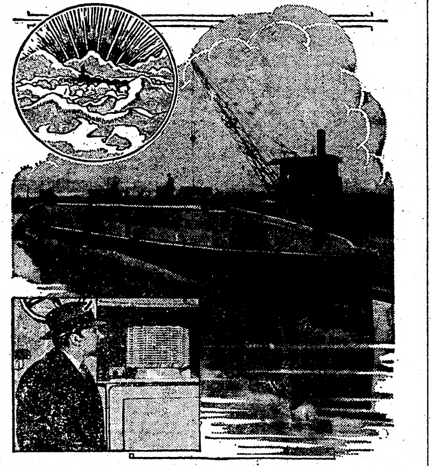
To Carry Ice to North Pole



The submarine, "Nautilus," by means of which Sir Hubert Wilkins hopes to make an undersea dash to North Pole. (Inset) Sir Hubert inspecting the boat's kitchen.

THE expedition of Sir Hubert Wilkins, the explorer, to the North Pole will be the most unusual in the history of the world—an attempt to explore the polar regions by means of a submarine. His undersea boat, christened the "Nautilus," after Jules Verne's famous vessel of fiction, will try to travel under the top of the earth and beneath the North Pole.

But Sir Hubert has arranged that his crew of twenty will have all modern comforts possible. On the trip to the coldest section of the world, the submarine will be equipped with an electric refrigerator and his men will have the advantages of sunlamps, as well as electric fans, radio, electric washing machines, vacuum cleaners electric stove and electric heaters. The General Electric Company was called in to install the refrigerator and other appliances.

While the submarine will travel under the ice, the temperature inside the boat will be such that foodstuffs would spoil without an electric refrigerator. Then, too, while the boat will travel to the North Pole—Land of the Midnight Sun—the crew would get little natural sunlight. That's the reason for the sunlamps.

Highest Paid Short Fiction Writer

FANNIE HURST is the highest paid short story writer in the world today There's a good reason for that. She knows human nature and under the magic of her touch, the people about whom she writes become real people, not mere literary creations. The plots of her stories are based on incidents from real life as it is lived every day by the common people.

Such are the stories which are appearing in this newspaper. Be sure to read them and talk to your friends about them, for they like interesting stories, too. And Fannie Hurst's stories are interesting stories.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, June 5, 1931. Volume 21; Number 6.

Increased Volume

Has forced us to make a change in our usual method of taking in cream, and in order to properly handle the increase without any further outlay or expensive equipment, we have decided, JUNE 1st, to split our territory, using the new highway as the dividing line.

All of the patrons living on the east side of the new highway are asked to bring their cream on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, as before, and those living on the west side of the new highway are asked to bring their cream on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Also, in order that we may churn our Land O' Lakes cream on Saturdays and not on Sundays, we will stop receiving Land O' Lakes at 10:00 a. m.

This change has been made to save our patrons as much expense as possible and thereby enable us to put that much more into the purchase of butterfat, and we will appreciate and expect your support and cooperation.

Yours for higher prices,
Farmers Co-operative Creamery Company,
Holt, Minnesota.

Baseball Season Opens

The baseball season opened here last Thursday night when the Newfolden nine played the local boys on a wet and muddy field. The playing was rather ragged, due to lack of practice, and numerous errors were committed. At the end of the seven-inning game Newfolden led, 9-5.

Sunday the Holt boys went down to St. Hilaire to meet the baseball team of that place. Due to a series of errors, Holt made 4 runs in the 4th inning, giving them a 4-3 lead until the 8th, when, by a desperate onslaught, St. Hilaire tied the score.

The winning tally was not run in until the last of the ninth when St. Hilaire put two zippy grass-cutters through the third-baseman, giving them the 4-5 victory.

On Sunday the locals go to Newfolden for a return game with that team.

Use Crop By-Products

Fargo, June 5.—"Let's help ourselves by making the most of our own home grown feeds," declares Dr. P. F. Trowbridge, director of experiment station at the North Dakota Agricultural in a plea to the Northwest farmer to buy linseed meal, a by-product of flax, instead of cotton seed meal.

"The Northwest produces more than 95 percent of all the flax in the United States", Dr. Trowbridge declares. "This is grown as cash crop and we scarcely realize the value to us of the by-product, linseed meal or cake, as an adjunct to our increaeing livestock industry. This protein concentrate is necessary to the growing and finishing of our livestock and the linseed meal is better than cottonseed meal. It is a necessary supplement to our grains in the economical fattening of our livestock and is an efficient supplement in the feeding of our dairy herds and poultry flocks.

"The big feeder can get in a carload of linseed meal. Every community can help home industries if it makes this concentrate available to every small feeder of livestock. Northwest farmers buying mixed feeds should insist on a mix that includes linseed meal. It is one way we can help provide a market for our own products."

.·.Grassy and Weedy Flavors.·.

NOW is the time to be on the lookout for grassy and weedy flavors in your cream. Flavors that show up even with the best of care.

Cream may be ever so sweet and still will go for second grade, just because it has that grassy flavor, which makes it unfit for use in Land O'Lakes butter.

By taking the cows off pasture two or three hours before milking, and by thoroughly stirring while cooling the cream it is possible to do away with a good deal of these off flavors.

Autogiro at State Fair

St. Paul, Minn., June 5.—The autogiro windmill type of airplane - recently demonstrated in the East, will be seen in daily flights at the Minnesota State Fair, September 5 to 12, announces Raymond A. Lee, secretary. It will be the first appearance of such a ship in the Northwest.

In keeping with its policy of introducing new features in aviation the Fair management has signed a contract for daily exhibition flights of this recently perfected craft, which its inventors claim will make flying a matter of personal interest to everybody in a few years.

"In the autogiro the familiar wings of the airplane are replaced by four self-rotating blades mounted on a hub above the fuselage," says Mr. Lee, "while the motor supplies the forward speed, it is the rotation of the free-moving blades which gives the autogiro its lift.

"The autogiro can rise and descend vertically. It can maintain a low speed of 20 miles an hour in flight, or it can fly at the cruising speed normal to ships of its class. Its forward speed checked, it can descend vertically more slowly than a man in a parachute."

The autogiro will be on display in the aircraft building at the Fair when not in flight, where visitors will be given an opportunity of inspecting it.

Short Course Begins Monday

The Twentieth annual Junior Short Course at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston will begin Monday afternoon, June 8 and will continue through Thursday noon, June 11. The course is open to all boys and girls in northwestern Minnesota between the ages of 12 and 21.

Boys and girls should come Monday afternoon, June 8 or on Tuesday morning, June 9. The school bus will meet all trains Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning.

Students should bring bedding such as sheets, blankets, pillows, also soap, towels, tennis shoes and bathing suits, if available, musical instruments and change of clothing.

The program includes demonstrations, contests, outdoor games, stunts, movies and other entertainment. The instruction offered will be especially helpful to 4-H club members as lectures and demonstrations will be given to assist in the summer project work.

H. A. Pflughoeft, club leader, will supervise the activities for the week. The total cost for room, board, and entertaiment will be $3.00.

The Eighth Annual Livestock Feeders' Day will be held at the Northwest Experiment Station Monday, June 15. According to George Wight, Animal Husbandman at the station, the features of the day's program will be discussion of the beef feeding trial. Other features of the program will be talks by prominent livestock specialists on practical problems of particular interest to the Red River Valley livestock men.

Women's Camp

The Sixth Annual Women's Camy will begin at the Northwest School Monday, June 15, and will continue through Thursday noon June 18. The camp is open to all women of northwestern Minnesota. The total expense for room, board, and the entertainment will be $3.75.

Faculty for Next Year Hired

The local board of education announce that they have now completed the work of hiring the entire teaching staff for the local school for next year, the last contract being returned here this week. In order to reduce the cost of operating our school system here for the next year, the board has hired one teacher less, cutting the teaching staff to five instead of six members.

The following people will have charge here next year as school faculty: E. O. Nybbaken, from Drayton, N. D., will be the new Superintendent.

Miss Edith Anderson from St. Peter, who had charge of high school work here this year, was rehired to fill the same position next year.

Alfred N. Sather, Fargo has been hired to teach the 6th, 7th, and 8th grades.

Miss Jeanette Lanman from McIntosh who has taught the 3d and 4th grades for the past two years, was re-hired and will teach the same grades and also the 5th grade next year.

Miss Eunice Johnson, Newfolden will teach the 1st and 2nd grades, this being her first year at teaching.

R. B. Perry, who was the superintendent here this year, will be superintendent of the school at Willow River, Minn., next year. Mr. Perry and family are spending their summer vacation at Ogilvie, Minn.

Miss Mable Ahlsten, Wheaton, who taught the 1st and 2d grades here the past two years has taken a job closer to her home for the coming year.

Clifford Overum of Thief River Falls, who was with us for two years doing high school work has decided not to teach next year as he will take some more studies at a university.

Miss Amy Rognlie of Halstad who spent three years here taking care of the 5th and 6th grades has decided to quit teaching school and will soon marry Elmer Johnson, owner of the bakery in Halstad.

An ad a day keeps the wolf away.

Mud Lake Rambles

Edward and John Johnson, and Doris and Eunice Leiran visited at the L. Sagstuen home Sunday afternoon.

Miss Verna Becker completed the term of school in Dist. 152 on Friday. On Thursday afternoon the school picnic was held for the parents, pupils and friends. The pupils having perfect attendance for the entire term were Olga Nelson and Joyce and Clifford Mobarg.

Joe Becker of Thief River Falls spent Thursday night at the L. Sagstuen home, returning to Thief River Falls Friday accompanied by Miss Verna Becker.

Arnold Sannes visited from Wednesday until Friday at the Otto Johnton home at Strathcona.

Doris Leiran is employed at the L. Sagstuen home this week.

Johnnie, Clara, Olga and Gladys Nelson and Gerinda Monson visited at the H. Moberg home Sunday afternoon.

Honoring the "Maid of Grand Pre"

HISTORIC EVANGELINE OAK ON BAYOU TECHE

THE NEW EVANGELINE MONUMENT ©International

THE REAL "EVANGELINE"—EMMERLINE LABICHE

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE other day several thousand people gathered in the little town of St. Martinville, La., to participate in a ceremony which rolled back the pages of history to events that took place more than 175 years ago. The ceremony was the unveiling of a statue and when it stood revealed there was recalled once more a great tragedy in American colonial history, and one of the tenderest love stories in American literature, the story of the quest of Evangeline for her lover, Gabriel, immortalized in a poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. For the statue was a life-size image of the famous "Maid of Grand Pre" and most of those who had gathered there to pay her honor were her own people—Louisiana descendants of the Eighteenth century Acadians and a delegation of several hundred Acadians from Moncton, Grand Pre, Montreal and other Canadian cities and towns who made a pilgrimage to this shrine for this occasion and who were also repaying a visit made by the Louisiana Acadians to Canada last year.

Erecting the statue over the spot near the left wing of the old St. Martin Catholic church in St. Martinville where the real Evangeline lies buried is one of the steps in the project of establishing a national reservation there to be known as the Longfellow-Evangeline National Memorial park, a public recreation center which will perpetuate the memory of the American poet and the Acadian girl, in particular, and the Acadians, their sufferings, their romance and their faith, in general.

The name of the real "Evangeline" was Emmerline Labiche, the faithless "Gabriel" was Louis Arceneaux, and their life story is a part of the tragic tale of the simple folk of Acadia who were deported by British soldiery from their homes away back in 1755. The Acadians were French colonists who had settled in what is now Nova Scotia in 1607, and who lived a happy, contented existence in their homes in the New world until caught in the maelstrom of world politics, stirred up by the contest between England and France to decide which nation was to dominate the North American continent. In the series of wars between the two countries which began in 1689 Acadia was a pawn on the international chess-board, now held by the French and now by the British.

As for the Acadians themselves, they were in the main neutral. In fact they were often referred to in the official papers of the time as the "Neutral French." While the sympathies of most of them no doubt leaned toward their own countrymen and some of them supported the French cause, for the most part they wished to be left alone in their peaceful pursuits as farmers and fishermen.

In that year the British, who then held Acadia, decided that the Acadians were "an enemy encamped in the heart of the province" and determined to get rid of them. Accordingly this was done by methods which seem to have been unnecessarily harsh.

The principal responsibility for this rests upon the lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia, Charles Lawrence, who was acting governor until the lords of trade in London should pick a successor to Gov. Peregrine Hopson, who had resigned.

By harvest time in 1755 the expulsion of the Acadians began when Colonel Monckton, acting under Lawrence's instructions, gathered in 400 of the inhabitants of Chignecto. Colonel John Winslow will live in history as the officer sent to "the little village of Grand Pre, on the shore of the Basin of Minas."

Winslow arrived at Grande Pre on August 19. September 2 Colonel Winslow issued a proclamation informing the people that the lieutenant-governor had a communication to impart to them. The men were ordered, therefore, to appear in the church at Grand Pre at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, September 5.

On that fateful Friday a strange sight greeted the 418 men as they filed slowly into the church that had been familiar to them from their youth. Stern-faced soldiers with gleaming bayonets and red coats guarded the door and in the middle of the church a table had been placed and around it other armed soldiers were drawn up.

As Colonel Winslow entered, attended by his staff, a deep hush fell upon the people. Without any preliminaries, he proceeded to deliver his address in English. Immediately afterward it was interpreted to the assemblage in French.

With the pronouncement of the terrible words, "That your lands and tenements, cattle of all kinds and live stock of all sorts are forfeited to the crown with all your other effects, saving your money and household goods, and that you yourselves are to be removed from this, his majesty's province," a murmur of anguish escaped the dumfounded Acadians

Until aroused by the sharp command of an officer, the bewildered inhabitants sat mute and staring, as though unable to comprehend the significance of the fate they were consigned to. Recovering from the shock of Winslow's words, the Acadians' first thoughts were of their families, with whom they had no means of communication and who would not understand the reason for their detention.

After a lengthy conference Colonel Winslow permitted the prisoners to choose 20 of their number to break the news to the families and to bring in food for the prisoners. They were to be held accountable for the behavior and safe return of the 20.

An effort was made to keep families intact. But a lack of transports; the natural confusion and terror that necessarily followed; Winslow's fears that his force, greatly outnumbered by the Acadians, might be overpowered, and the barrier of language all contributed to the separations that made the sufferings of the exiled Acadians so tragic.

Three ships, the first to sail, left the Basin of Minas October 13, bound for Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania. The last ship to leave Acadia sailed southward December 20. To prevent any stragglers that escaped to the forests from finding a place of refuge, squads of soldiers attended to the work of burning every house, barn or building that would in any way furnish shelter.

In all from Grand Pre and other places more than 6,000 Acadians were deported. They were scattered in the English colonies from Maine to Georgia and in both France and England. Many died; many, helpless in new surroundings, sank into decrepit pauperism. Some reached people of their own blood in the French colony of Louisiana and Canada.

Among those who came to Louisiana was young Louis Arceneaux who had become separated from his sweetheart, Emmerline Labiche, and who settled on Bayou Teche, a stream which winds in and out like a snake, hence its name, which is the Indian term for snake. Here, too, ten years later came Emmerline Labiche, who had been mourning the loss of her lover.

At last Emmerline found him, and tradition says that the meeting took place beneath the historic Evangeline Oak on the Bayou Teche, where she learned that her faithless lover had married another.

There is some variation in the accounts of how Longfellow came to write the story of Evangeline. According to one story it was Nathaniel Hawthorne who first gave the poet the hint of the romance which he wove into his poem. Under the date of October 24, 1838, we find the following memorandum in Hawthorne's American Note-Books: "H. L. C.—heard from a French Canadian a story of a young couple in Acadie. On their marriage day all men of the province were summoned to assemble in the church to hear a proclamation. When they assembled they were seized and shipped off to be distributed through New England, among them the bridegroom. His bride set off in search of him, wandered about New England all her lifetime, and at last when she was old, she found her bridegroom on his deathbed. The shock was so great that it killed her likewise."

H. L. C. was Horace Lorenzo Conolly, then a neighbor of Hawthorne at Salem. He had been rector of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal church in South Boston. But Hawthorne was probably in error in stating that Conolly obtained the story directly from a French Canadian.

At any rate some time later Hawthorne took Conolly to dine with Longfellow at Cambridge. During the dinner the clergyman told Longfellow that he had been trying in vain to get Hawthorne to write a story based on an incident told him by Mrs. George M. Haliburton, a former parishoner, who had formerly lived in Nova Scotia. Conolly then related the story briefly. Longfellow said to Hawthorne: "If you really do not want this incident, let me have it for a poem." His friend willingly consented, and "Evangeline" was the result.

The other account—and this is the one which you will hear in the Acadian country of Louisiana—is that Longfellow, while he was an instructor at Harvard, was told the story by a handsome young Acadian, then a student at Harvard, Edward Simon, later a judge in Louisiana, who had learned it from his friend, Judge Felix Voorhies. Judge Voorhies had been told the story by his grandmother, Madame Anne Bastarieche, who brought Evangeline to the Teche country. Madame Bastarieche died in 1830 at the age of 103.

It was Madame Bastarieche who told of how Emmerline Labiche sprang forward with a glad cry when she met her former lover and of how the faithless lover told her that he had married another and was happy.

On the lands of the ancient Duke DeBois Blanc Louis Arceneaux settled with his bride and there many of his descendants live today. The heartbroken girl, Madame Bastarieche told her grandson, lost her reason and, until death came to her, she wandered about the banks of the Teche, gathering the water hyacinths and weaving bride's wreaths of them.

Halt Aliens at Canada Border

Huge Smuggling Ring Bared as Reason for Heavy Deportations.

Washington.—Answering criticism of the illegality of deportation methods employed by the United States Department of Labor, Secretary William H. Doak refers to Canada as the source of the major part of alien smuggling into the republic and implies that only illegal technique can combat this smuggling.

Criticism of the immigration officials is contained in a study of deportation methods prepared for President Hoover's national commission on law observance and enforcement by Attorney Reuben Oppenheimer of Baltimore.

"Immigration authorities had knowledge of the existence of this gang of smugglers in Canada," declared Secretary Doak, "and knew that for a fixed price, ranging from $100 to $500 a head, the group would undertake to run aliens illegally into the United States."

Many Finns Brought In.

The secretary spoke of the recent raid on a Finnish dance in New York city and the arrest of 20 Finns without warrant.

"The immigration authorities have been informed," he went ont, "that fully 1,000 Finns who left Finland and entered Canada as immigrants are now unlawfully in New York city alone, and it is strongly believed that a good many more who have been smuggled in under like circumstances (through the Buffalo district, across the Niagara river) are now in other parts of the country.

"These facts concern only one race of alien people and the seriousness of the situation becomes apparent when it is considered that like systems of violating the immigration laws are in operation with respect to other nationalities. In some instances it is known that the operation of these systems begins abroad and extends to all of the borders of the United States."

Agrees With Secretary.

Assistant Secretary W. W. Husband, who, as United States commissioner of immigration for many years, has been more intimately in touch with immigration problems than any official in the Department of Labor, agrees with Secretary Doak that "the judicial illegality" of arresting aliens without warrants of any kind is necessary if the immigration authorities are to accomplish any increase in deportations.

"I don't know whether Canada beats Cuba as the source of this alien smuggling," said Mr. Husband, "but it's certainly just as bad. All along the border in Canada are persons whose chief business seems to be getting aliens in the United States for a consideration. Just recently we picked up a poor girl in Buffalo whose last payment to a fellow for rowing her across the Niagara was $100. What her other payments had been I do not know. I guess that's one of the most expensive ferries in the world. The girl had to go back to Jugoslavia and the crook has her money."

Mouse on Battery Halts Farmer's Car

He called a garage man and had it hauled to the garage. An examination disclosed the fact that in some manner a mouse had got on the battery.

The mouse had died there and its body lay across the wires, causing a short.

Unique Trade Tour on Queer Autos Is Planned

Coventry, Eng.—A unique traveling British industries fair contained in a number of amphibian automobiles soon is to make a 12,000 miles trade promotion tour of Europe and Africa.

The automobiles, or "boat cars," now being built by the Riley company here, are designed to cross the deepest rivers without the aid of a separate boat or raft and are propelled by canoe paddles. The cars are fitted with giant wheels and surrounded by a detachable electron frame carrying four large air bags on each side of the car. When inflated the air bags will enable the vehicles to cross any water course at such a height as to prevent harm to the engine. They will be accompanied by a trailer and two motorcycles.

Over forty British manufacturers are co-operating in the expedition which, headed by Capt. Geoffrey Malins, the explorer, is expected to be traveling for over a year. Two or three expert salesmen will assist Captain Malins in an endeavor to convince the people of the countries visited that British goods are best. Samples are being taken in the cars and a portable projector and films will help advertise the goods of the interested manufacturers. Malins will also take a film of the trip to be exhibited in England upon his return.

School Board Turns Down Ban on Smoking

Emporia, Kan.—Because the school board members here felt they couldn't ask the men teachers not to smoke as long as some of the members of the board smoked, they also felt they couldn't ask the women teachers not to smoke if the men teachers smoked. This reasoning recently prevented a clause from getting into the 1931-32 contracts of Emporia city school teachers. The clause would prohibit women teachers from smoking in public, or in private.

AUTOGIRO WILL REPLACE AIRPLANE, SAYS EXPERT

Aviation Writer Declares Safety Features Are Its Most Important Advantage.

New York.—The airplane of the future will be an autogiro.

Such is the prophecy of Herbert Brucker, authority on aviation and writer of articles on the subject. In the Review of Reviews he describes the new windmill airplane which can rise steeply and land vertically.

"For warfare, for carrying mail and passengers at high speeds, the airplane will remain—perhaps," writes Mr. Brucker. "But when in future years the common man and his wife get into the air, they will do so in an autogiro.

The chief feature of the autogiro is its safety. So long as it is in the air, its spinning wings automatically keep flying. They are not connected with the motor, being driven by air currents.

"They are long and thin, those wings. Also they are flexible. When the machine is on the ground you can reach up, shake one, and watch it wiggle. More than ever you wonder how the autogiro can be safe with the lack of ridigity in its main supporting surfaces. The answer is that strength against upward thrusts is unnecessary. In the air only centrifugal force keeps the rotor blades from folding up on their hinges, like an umbrella turned inside out."

Mr. Brucker describes a flight in an autogiro:

"You clamber into the front cockpit. In your own person you make that stupendous climb you have just witnessed from the ground. Slowly you make a turn which you know, in an airplane, could be approached only by banking so tightly that centrifugal force would press you heavily down into your seat while the blood rushed down out of your head. But now you circle about in leisured comfort. You drone upward in a wide circle.

"Shortly the climb ceases. You are 3,000 feet above ground. The vibration and roar of the powerful motor stop. But, instead of the swift, rushing airplane glide which you still expect, in spite of what you have seen, the 'giro hangs in the air. A few feet above your head the rotor spins reassuringly. You look over the side and see, far below, the white circle marking the field from which you started. The tension of rapid motion is gone. Nowhere is there any strain, or anything else at which to take alarm. For the first time you have the feeling of flying without effort, without strain. Then you look over again, and find the houses, the trees, and field much closer—for in all this stillness you are dropping steadily. And, so, finally you go into a landing, and with a gentle bump touch the ground."

Dodge Old Age

THE STORY

Robert Heathers and William Heydon, to escape secular and religious tyranny, leave England in 1634 for the New World. They are welcomed at Boston by Rev. Doctor Cotton and make acquaintance with Amos Todkill, veteran soldier and woodsman. Heydon falls in love with Elizabeth Brade. The young men settle down to the life of the colonists. Adverse comment forces them to dispense with their pretty cook, Mabel Hartley. Robert is smitten with Peggy Weld, who is engaged to James Rosewell.

They rode on in silence. She broke it, saying: "Don't take it seriously. You are one of the dearest of men and there are better fish in the sea than were ever caught. I'm a common alewife that they use in growing corn. I feel sorry for Rosewell when I think of myself. I'm unregenerate. A lady asked me the other day if I was bound for Heaven. I told her that I just kept going and really didn't know where I'd fetch up. She grew stern and said, 'It's a pity. Have you no sense of sanctification?' I had to say that no one had ever suspected me of having any kind of sense, that one might as well try to pick strawberries on the sea-beach. I'm all right in England, but here I'm a lost soul."

"Well, I ask one favor," he said. "It may be the last one I shall ever request."

"What is it?" she asked.

"I want a memory that will last as long as I live."

"A memory!" she exclaimed.

"A blessed memory! I want to kiss those lips of yours—just once."

She looked down and did not answer. The horses stopped. He dismounted. They were in the deep greenwood. She leaned toward him and their lips met.

Looking into her eyes he asked: "Do you think that I could ever forget that?"

"Lord o' mercy! It's a mean thing to do to 'one," she answered with a sigh.

"Why mean?"

"Because you put me in mind of the devil. I shall have nothing more to do with you. Your lips have filled me with a strange trembling. Get on your horse and look to your behavior. Let us go home and pull this burr out of our minds. I am engaged to marry one of the best men in the world. Keep that among your memories."

Robert returned to his home in a rather unhappy mood. He said to William: "I am now a lack-brained, sorry varlet. My virgin heart is broken. I called her a ray of sunlight piercing the gloom, but she has only pierced me. She's been a kind of lightning flash, and now it's darker than ever and I'm like a splintered tree with its top on the ground."

"Cheer up, old man," William answered. "Girls are coming on every ship. There's time enough. Meanwhile, my home shall be yours."

* * * * * * *

Early October of the memorable year of 1635 brought a welcome arrival to the colony. He was young Sir Harry Vane, of the best blood in England, a descendant of the Sir Harry who fought heroically with the "Black Prince" at Poitiers. The newcomer had been a friend of Heydon in the school at Westminster. The young baronet had been a commoner in spirit and a noted rebel at Magdalen college. He was still a rebel—young, handsome and picturesque. A courtly figure, he had the Puritan leaning and a genius for statecraft. His fine manners and brilliant talk captured the leading men of the colony. He, they agreed, should be the next governor. Heraldry had its power even in New England when backed by a clean personality and hatred of oppression. He took William to his heart with all friendly good feeling for the sake of well-remembered days.

Vane's friendship had strengthened William with the Brades. One evening the boy sat with Bess. His way was now open.

"After all these ages of waiting, when are we to be married?" he asked.

"Suppose I say tomorrow," Bess answered. "There's a test for your courage."

"Next to tonight I favor tomorrow," he answered.

"There is a matter of family courtesy to be considered," Mr. Brade remarked. "My father will arrive early in November. It is only a little time to wait for his blessing, a deference which would, I am sure, please him deeply. The marriage may take place immediately after his arrival."

In the days that followed the lovers sailed the smooth, translucent, pearl-bottomed sea "whose water is nectar and whose rocks pure gold."

It was a day in the time of the Indian summer, when of a sudden every face in the quiet town was changed. The colony was rent with tumult and groping in a black cloud of mystery. In the evening of that day, Robert announced his intention of going to see Peggy Weld. The housekeeper testified that he went out at seven-thirty. William was not at home when Robert left. As to William's movements that night, the historian must be content with the court record.

It had been a warm quiet evening under a clear sky with a great golden moon rising. As to Robert, his doing, up to the hour of nine, there was much unquestionable evidence. Leaving home he wore his belt and pistol, as both young men were wont to do when they went out after dark. He was talking with the Welds and James Rosewell and the latter's bosom friend, Roderick Leighton, from Wiltshire, and Sir Harry Vane at the house of the governor. He left there at nine, saying: "This is the land of early hours. One wandering in the night at ten has to give a good account of himself."

The young lady went out of the door with him.

This entry in Robert's diary made some days later relates an incident of this last meeting as follows:

"She went out with me into the moonlit space in front of the door.

She Cried Out: "Don't Strike. Run Before He Sees You."

She put in my hands a little golden case shaped like a locket.

"'This is a curious plaything,' said she. 'It was called Le Medallion avec la serrure a secret. It came to me from my grandmother. It was made by an ingenious French jeweler for one of the naughty ladies of the court of King Henry VIII. The little thing is made to hold and carry secrets. You see, it has a gold beading around its rim. It is a trick to open it—a test of one's patience and curiosity. I lend it to you. When you have opened it bring or send it back to me. But be warned—years may pass before you find the combination that opens it or you may be lucky.'

"With that I came away. I have spent many hours pushing at members in the circlet around its rim that look like small golden beads. I suppose that certain of them communicate with springs and that these must be pushed in the right order."

Of the events of that evening, he has nothing further to say. He went away in the darkness and whither?

A goodman of the parish—one Hachaliah Grout, a constable—lay concealed that night beside a mossy glade in a pine thicket, remote from the house of the governor, his lantern hidden under his cloak. He had learned that the glade was a trysting place. The thicket was not in the path which Robert would naturally have taken.

About nine-fifteen of the clock a women came down the path to the glade dimly lighted from above. As she came the officer detected the odor of musk. The woman concealed herself in the bushes. Soon after that a young man entered the glade walking hurriedly, his sword tapping his leg. The woman stopped him and kissed his hand.

"Don't you know me?" she whispered. "I am your slave Mab."

"You wanton! Again you put my neck in danger," he had answered.

The pair retired in the shadows not two fathoms from the edge of the glade. A little later the constable sprang upon them, his lantern in his hand. They arose, terror-stricken. The officer seized the woman. He saw the young man not too clearly in the lantern light. The latter drew his sword. The woman had the better head. She cried out: "Don't strike. Run before he sees you."

There was no time for thinking. It was a moment when action yields to impulse. The young man leaped away and ran. He tore through the thicket and was soon in the open. As he ran a dog pursued him, it was thought, for a dog was found lying dead from a sword thrust.

The court convened at eight-thirty next morning. The young woman, Mabel Hartley, sometime the kitchen maid of William and Robert, was brought from the prison. The watchman related the circumstances under which she had been arrested. The grave, stern-faced Dudley examined the prisoner. Having heard the constable's account of her taking, substantially as given above, he asked:

"Have you a husband who is living?"

"Yes, sir."

"It is the foul sin of adultery. Do you know that the punishment is death?"

All eyes were on the unfortunate woman, who was weeping. She gave her head a pathetic, affirmative nod.

"As you value the mercy of God and this court, I enjoin you to tell the whole truth. With whom were you when the constable discovered you?"

She wiped her eyes, lifted her head and in a trembling tone spoke a name heard in every part of the courtroom:

"William Heydon."

Winthrop dropped the quill with which he had been writing and sank back in his chair. A pallor fell upon his face almost as much in contrast with his black robe as the ample breadth of white linen in his collar. Endicott and Dudley with wrinkled brows turned to each other and whispered. Winthrop broke the silence. He asked the constable:

"Did you see the man?"

"Yes, sir. He was William Heydon, sir. I have seen him often. This is the coat he wore. It was torn from his back in the thicket. We found it lyin' among thorny briars. In one o' the pockets is a letter to William Heydon."

"Is he under arrest?"

"No, sir. He threatened me with his sword and took to his legs. He is not to be found either at his home or the plantation he is clearin'. Both he and his friend made off for parts unknown whilst I was busy with the prisoner."

Winthrop conferred a moment with Endicott and Dudley. Then with sorrow in his face he said in a low tone: "If William Heydon has not returned by high noon you may proclaim the hue and cry."

In due time the constables went through the town with raised staffs crying out: "William Heydon, wanted for the foul sin of adultery, has fled Let all who hear me assemble at the courthouse for a hue and cry."

There were many who enjoyed the excitement of a man chase. It was one of the frightful customs of medieval men, giving free rein to primitive passion, still used in England but not before in the colony. The vulgar crowd gave themselves to its plan with the eager avidity of hounds in the chase—and especially if a man of rank were the fugitive. In the rage of it the captive was likely to lose his life. Soon men and boys and fishwives and dogs were in full cry, seeking William Heydon. The running, shouting, screaming, barking and blowing of horns filled the pursuers with excitement.

Many joined them, streaming westward in the main path, spreading into the bush on either side and beating the thickets with clubs in hand. Some had guns or pistols. They were more like furies than like those who have the brain and heart of man in them.

The tumult awoke strange echoes in the silent wilderness. It reached the ears of young Heydon who lay asleep in a mossy glade a mile or so west of the path from which he had wandered in the darkness trying to walk to his plantation. It pained the ears of the Brades, of Margaret Hooper, of John Cotton and of all the good people of the parish. What a striving of thoughts, what a beating of hearts, what a shuddering of souls was under all this hellish uproar!

Pets in Wide Variety Found at Army Posts

Old-time regulars in the Philippines hold to a fixed opinion. "Put a soldier on a desert, uninhabited island, leave him there six months, and when you go back to pick him up you'll find the man with a package of homemade cigarettes, a deck of playing cards, and a dog." Herbert E. Smith, writing in the United States Army Recruiting News, says that the affection of regulars for dogs—and vice versa—is proverbial. He states that there are few army garrisons today which do not own a wide variety of canine population of divers sizes, shapes and lineage.

Although dogs may come first in the list of preferred mascots, they are by no means the only barracks and camp pets of our service men. Second in popularity to the dogs are the common or alley breed of cats. The choice of the mascot usually depends upon the location of the army unit. Along the northern tier of states, at such posts as Fort Missoula, Mont., and Fort Snelling, Minn., one will come across some of the wilder species. A coyote was once conducted into the mascot service by some experimenting Fort Missoula soldiers, but the draftee did not take kindly to the life and soon decamped. A bald eagle, taken sorely wounded and tended carefully at Fort Snelling, also went "over the hill" after a short time.

Want Color in Vegetables

Connecticut, envious of the bright-colored carrots grown in California, has taken steps to reproduce the same attractive hue in its own produce. The Connecticut agricultural experiment station has laid out several acres to determine whether it is the California seed or sunshine that makes them that way. Experiments will also be conducted with California beets, lettuce and tomatoes.

WHEN YOU CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry-on in comfort.

Bayer Aspirin was meant for just such times, because it insures your comfort. Freedom from pains that nag at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block a threatening headache while it's still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you have caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Bayer Aspirin when you travel. Have some at home. It will often "save the day."

From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains, Bayer Aspirin is ready with its quick relief—and it always works. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Any nagging, needless pain.

Get the genuine tablets, stamped with the Bayer cross. Why experiment with imitations costing a few cents less? The saving is too little. There is too much at stake. But there is economy in the purchase of genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

Wiped Out Snake Litter

While a farmer on the Vet river, in South Africa, was felling a tree, he saw a large puffadder crawling over his foot. He jumped back in time and killed the reptile with a blow of the ax. The next moment the grass was teeming with young ones. The farmer soon accounted for the whole litter, and when he counted the lot he found that he had destroyed 29 snakes.

Balm of Gilead Prized for Healing Qualities

It is very evident that balm from trees or plants was quite commonly applied as a salve in Old testament times, and that the Balm of Gilead derived from a tree known as the Tzeri, in the beautifully wooded and fertile land of Gilead, by far the most highly favored part of Palestine, then as now, was esteemed an exceedingly valuable, perhaps and most valuable of all balms.

At the time of the Crusades, the Sultan Saladin and his physicians were credited with the possession of salves—"balms" or "balsams"—of almost miraculous healing potency for wounds. No doubt the knowledge of the value of the Balm of Gilead had been well preserved through many generations by the Arabs, and was still made use of by the Moslems, who had much to do with the spread of information which led up to the present position of medical science.

Favored by Nature

When pursued by another creature, the fire-bellied toad turns on his back and kicks up his legs in the air. Nature has provided him with a splash of red on the stomach and legs. As red is regarded as a danger sign by wild animals, no creature will eat him, and so he gets off scot free.

Famous Tapestry

The Gobelin tapestries originated in the work of a former dyer, named Gobelin, who in the Fifteenth century came from Reims to Paris, the family having discovered a marvelous scarlet dye which attracted great attention. In the Sixteenth century to the manufacture of dyes was added the manufacture of tapestry, which founded the fortune of the family. Some of the family were granted titles of nobility and some became leading statesmen of France. In the reign of Louis XIV, the government took over the Gobelin tapestry manufactures and they remain a state activity.

Can't PLAY Can't REST —child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

Many By-Products to 'Cream Farming'

No More Profit to Farmer in "Higher Price" of Fluid Milk.

The best system of farming is the one which results in the greatest financial advantage and contributes most to the farmer's economic wants, according to the De Laval Bureau of Dairying. It's the profit, not just the amount received for farm products that counts.

During recent years there has been a tendency among farmers to go into the production of fluid milk for the big city market without realizing that it costs in the neighborhood of 50 cents per 100 pounds more to produce the kind of milk consumers in the cities are demanding. Surveys made by a Mid-Western Agricultural college showed that it was costing farmers $2.15 to $2.60 per hundred pounds to produce milk for which they received only $2.50, and that of the 14 cents per quart for milk paid by the consumer the dealer received 8.6 cents and the farmer 5.3 cents.

Higher Price, But No More Profit.

The desire to sell milk as whole milk rather than as cream or milk to be converted into butter or cheese is due to a belief that the "higher price" leaves the greatest profit, says the Bureau. The skim milk profit angle is too often completely forgotten. When whole milk is shipped the profits that could be made from skim milk, the valuable by-products of "cream farming," are lost. The returns it is possible to make by properly making use of the skim milk retained on the farm after the cream has been separated from the whole milk is something far-sighted stock and dairy farmers should not overlook.

An explanation of the advantages of retaining skim milk on the farm is worked out in an example cited by a leading dairy authority as follows:

"The good creamery last year paid at least an average price of 50 cents a pound for fat. This would bring a return of $1.75 net for 3½ per cent milk. The skim milk left on the farm is easily worth 50 cents out of every 100 pounds, provided of course the dairy farmer is raising the right kind of live stock. This brings his milk to $2.25 net. It has been calculated by those who have given the matter study that it costs in the neighborhood of 50 cents more to produce the kind of milk that the consumers of Chicago are demanding. Adding this to the price returned by the creamery, we have $2.75. Out of this $2.75 the expense of operating the association must come and the milk must be hauled to the local plant, which costs from 10 to 20 cents a hundred. In other words, the person selling whole milk can scarcely expect to net any more than $2.50 a hundred. This would leave but 25 cents a hundred for the production of milk over that which the creamery pays and it is doubtful whether this will compensate for more than 50 per cent of the additional costs of producing market milk.

Here's How to Figure It Out.

"Further, when skim milk is used on the farm it permits a different type of farming to be developed. It is difficult, indeed, to say how much more a farmer can earn if he raises his calves, some hogs and chickens. This will depend upon the management of the farm, but it is a factor of no small consequence and should be considered by those who would leave their creameries and cheese factories in order to get what appears to be a much higher price for their milk."

FIND MECHANICAL MILKER CUTS COSTS

Tests completed at the Iowa State Agricultural college showed a saving of 50 per cent in time and 25 per cent in costs by milking cows through the use of a mechanical system, reports the De Laval Bureau of Dairying.

The experiments were conducted to determine the labor economy and any reduction in costs that might come through the use of the milking machine as compared with the common practice of milking by hand. The objection frequently heard that the saving in time achieved by mechanical milking is more than offset by the extra labor involved in washing the utensils was shown to have no basis. It was found that with the machine the entire milking job, including the necessary cleaning of the mechanical equipment, could be done in half the time required by hand. It was also shown that the saving in labor cost more than offset the cost of the milker. Not only did the milking machine save time and lower the cost of the milking operation, but it also removed a great deal of the drudgery of milking.

Costly to Feed Hogs Skimmilk Rich in Fat

On many farms wornout, improperly designed or poorly constructed separators are in daily use, despite the valuable educational work of the agricultural colleges, county agents and cow-test association supervisors, states the De Laval Bureau of Dairying. Instead of serving as "cream savers" these faulty machines have become "cream thieves." One state cow-testing association report published last year showed 19 separators losing $50 a month. It is costly business to feed butterfat worth $44 per hundred pounds to hogs selling for between $8.00 and $12.00 per hundred.

Gears Must Be In Mesh When Coasting, Says Law

"The driver of a motor vehicle when traveling on a down grade shall not allow the vehicle to coast with the gears in neutral," according to the traffic act.

A Highway bulletin calls attention to this provision in connection with cetain devices that may be attached to any car to give "free wheeling." The Highway department is not passing judgement on such devices, but merely suggests that motorists before purchasing examine them to see that they are so constructed that the criver can operate them within the law.

The "free wheeling" devices which are built in as an integral part of several cars are so devised that the engine can be used as a brake when desired, and comply with the law.

Sugar Beets

Apparently the present low sugar prices bring more discouragement to the older than to the newer beet grower areas.

While many beet sugar factories in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and other eastern states are not to be operated this year, local plants in Minnesota and Iowa will "carry on." Contracts are being awarded under which farmers in the vicinity of factories will be paid about three million dollars this year for beets grown on 60,000 acres in the two states. In 1930 more than two million dollars were paid to Minnesota beet growers near the Chaska and East Grand Forks plants.

Although the factories will operate at 80 per cent of their maximum capacities, this policy will assure the continued existence of the industry in this district. The older eastern companies closed down because "no beet sugar factory can be operated profitably at present sugar prices." The decision to "carry on" in this newer field in the face of existing conditions may be taken as an indication of the strength of a now minor crop in Minnesota.—St. Paul Dispatch.

Lose Close Ball Game

The Holt baseball team dropped the return game to West Valley (at Newfolden) Sunday by a 7-6 score. Holt scored first in the third, but West Valley retaliated by making five hits and as many runs in the fourth inning. The score was tied in the fifth when Holt pushed over four runs. After this, there was not an inning but what Holt collected a lot of hits, but they were unable to score from them except in the seventh. The score remained a tie until the last of the ninth, when Newfolden shoved over the winning tally.

The score by innings:

West Valley	0	0	0	5	0	1	0	0	1

The Holt boys have shown that they can play ball. With a little more practice, victories will come as a matter of course. The idea is to get the team in good working order.

Annual Livestock Feeders' Day

Livestock men of northwestern Minnesota are invited to attend the Eighth Annual Livestock Feeders' Day to be held at the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston June 15.

The purpose of Livestock Feeders' Day is to give stock raisers and feeders an opportunity to see the cattle fed experimentally at the Northwest School, and to get first hand the information secured in the trial; also to hear discussions of practical everyday feeding problems by various livestock specialists.

Appearing on the program are W. H. Peters, Chief of the Animal Husbandry Division from the University Farm, St. Paul; W. L. Calvert, Extension Economist; and A. E. Engebretson, Extension Animal Husbandman.

A discussion of the baby beef trial conducted at the Northwest Experiment Station will be the feature of the program. George Wight and R. J. Christgau, representing the Livestock Department of the Northwest School, are in charge of the program.

Dairy Week

Dairying is one of Minnesota's most important industries and the great stabilizing influence in Minnesota's agriculture. Minnesota is the leading butter state in the Union, producing 17 per cent of the nation's supply. Minnesota is reputed to have the richest iron mines in the world, but the annual value of dairy products exceeds the annual value of iron ore output. The prosperity and welfare of every citizen of this state is directly related to the prosperity and welfare of agriculture.

Widespread depression in the business world has curtailed the demand for Minnesota dairy products and our producers are suffering from prices that are the lowest in more than 20 years. This is a matter of grave concern, not only to the producers but to every citizen in the state. Immediate and substantial relief from this situation would follow if the people of Minnesota would increase their consumption of milk, butter, cheese, ice cream and other dairy products.

The health value of dairy products in the human diet has been established beyond all doubt. Wide studies and surveys have shown that the average person does not consume enough dairy products for best health requirements.

For these reasons, I deem it in the interest of all of the people of Minnesota to proclaim the week beginning June 15, 1931, as Dairy week as a means of forcefully calling attention to the situation as set forth above and I urge all citizens to observe Dairy Week by appropriate means. This is an especially opportune time for individuals and groups to evolve ways and means and adopt measures to carry on sustained efforts in behalf of a vitally important basic industry.

FLOYD B. OLSON,
Governor of Minnesota.
